Alarm over Soviet arms aid

REAGAN BAN ON NICARAGUA

Thatcher will get a special briefing today

AN order banning all U.S. trade with Nicaragua and prohibiting Nicaraguan ships and aircraft from entering America was signed yesterday by President Reagan because of what he called the Sandinista Government's "unusual and extraordinary" threat to U.S. security.

Mr Reagan will explain "the seriousness of the threat" at bilateral meetings today with Mrs Thatcher, President Mitterrand and Japan's Prime Minister, Mr Nakasone, in Bonn, where the seven-nation economic Summit is being held.

There is growing alarm in the White House about Nicaragua's recently-strengthened military ties with the Soviet bloc and the Sandinista regime's armed subversion of neighbouring countries.

As a huge security operation began in Bonn yesterday a bomb was found in the suburb of Bad Godesberg, where some of the Summit participants are staying.

President Reagan's controversial wreath-laying visit on Sunday to the Bitburg war cemetery, where 49 Nazi S S soldiers are buried, will go ahead, but it has been cut by half to about 15 minutes.

Terrorist bomb defused

By MICHAEL FARR in Bonn

A BOMB was found yesterday in a Bonn suburb, setting off fresh fears that terrorists may seek to disrupt the seven-nation economic Summit which opens in the West German capital today.

About 13lb of explosives packed into a fire extinguisher were found in a blue holdall outside the offices of the German Aerospace and Arms Industry Association in the suburb of Bad Godesberg, where many of the Summit participants are staying.

After the device was defused, security sources said it bore all the hallmarks of the "Revolutionary Cells," an extreme Left-wing terrorist group responsible for most of the recent series of bombings in West Germany.

The previous chairman of the aerospace and arms association, Dr Ernst Zimmermann, was murdered at his home near Munich in February by members of the Red Army Faction, better known as the Baader-Meinhof gang.

Bonn's biggest-ever security operation, involving more than 10,000 police, was in full swing yesterday with the arrival of President Reagan at Cologne-Bonn airport.

Thatcher's arrival

Mrs Thatcher, President Mitterand and Signor Craxi, the Italian Prime Minister, fly in this afternoon for the Summit which formally opens tonight with a reception given by Chancellor Kohl at the Augustusburg Castle outside Bonn.

President Reagan is staying at Gymnich Castle, near Bonn, which is owned by Baron Jörg von Holzschuher, a godson of Hitler.

"I had completely forgotten about it until my mother reminded me," the baron was quoted as saying to a West German newspaper.

The West German government pays his family rent for the castle which it has used for years as a government guest house. Mr Brezhnev stayed there when he was Russia's leader.

Meanwhile American and West German officials were insisting yesterday that despite the 390-26 vote in the House of Representatives against President Reagan's visit on Sunday to the German war cemetery at Bitburg, the wreath-laying was still on, though the ceremony would be cut back by half to only about 15 minutes.

Bomb kills firemen

OUR BRUSSELS CORRESPONDENT writes: Two firemen died and 12 other people were injured early yesterday by a car bomb in the centre of Brussels. Responsibility for the attack was claimed by the "Communist Cells" organisation "in solidarity with workers on May Day."

'Unusual threat' to U.S.

By RICHARD BEESTON in Bonn

PRESIDENT REAGAN yesterday declared a national emergency to deal with what he called Nicaraguas "unusual and extraordinary threat" to American security, and imposed sweeping sanctions against the Sandinista Government.

Only hours after arriving at the castle on the Rhine where he is staying for the Bonn economic summit, Mr Reagan signed an executive order prohibiting all American trade with Nicaragua and banned Nicaraguan ships and aircraft from entering United States territory.

In a dramatic prelude to a summit whose theme is free trade and reconciliation, Mr Reagan signed an executive order declaring:

"I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States, find that the policies and actions of the Government of Nicaragua constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security of the United States and hereby declare a national emergency to deal with that threat."

'Military links with Cuba'

A White House spokesman said Mr Reagan would explain "the seriousness of the threat" which Nicaragua posed to America in bilateral meetings in Bonn today with Mrs Thatcher, President Mitterrand of France and Mr Nakasone, Prime Minister of Japan.

The sanctions also include notification of United States intent to terminate its treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation with Nicaragua.

The White House spokesman Mr Larry Speakes said Mr Reagan had authorised these steps "in response to the emergency situation created by the Nicaragua government's agressive activities in central America."

Mr Speakes referred to Nicaraguas "continuing efforts to subvert its neighbour, its rapid and destabilising military build-up, its close military and security ties to Cuba and the Soviet Union and its imposition of Communist totalitarian internal rule."

Mr Speakes said that since the House of Representatives had failed to act on President

BAe comes to market with £550m share offer

By ROLAND GRIBBEN Business Correspondent

A TOTAL of £550 million will be raised by the Government and British Aerospace from the biggest share offer since British Telecom's flotation last year.

The Government will get more than £365 million for its remaining 48 per cent. stake in B A, and the company the balance from a rights issue, according to details announced yesterday.

But the public was cautioned over regarding the sale of the Government's shares as another British Telecom-style flotation with the prospect of quick profits.

Sir Austin Pearce, the chairman, and financial advisers stressed there was a greater risk element attached to B A and emphasised they were aiming for the "sophisticated investor."

The Government shares and the company's one-for-four rights issue are being offered at 375p, a narrow 5 per cent. discount on yesterday's opening price of 395p, details will be advertised in the DAILY TELEGRAPH tomorrow.

The offer involves a down-payment of 200p on application and the final instalment of 175p by September 10. Applications must be in by Friday, May 10.

The Government and company shares have been lumped into a "package" of 146,800,000 shares, with the lion's share allocated to City institutions.

The have been allotted 80,760,000 shares, 55 per cent. of the total, the 49,000 worker-shareholders five million (3·5 per cent.), other existing shareholders 25,800,000 (17·5 per cent.) and the public 35,290,000 (24 per cent.).

The Government will retain a "Golden Share" which prevents a foreign takeover for the company which was earlier involved in abortive merger talks with both General Electric and Thorn E M I.

The cost of the offer is estimated at around £22 million, with the company footing the bill for £8 million, and the Government for £13,500,000.

Solidarity riots flare in Poland

By ROBIN GEDYE in Warsaw

A YOUTH was beaten unconscious and a riot policeman was kicked and punched in Gdansk yesterday as some of the worst rioting for over a year erupted in the Solidarity stronghold.

Two thousand youths, aparently intent on confrontation with steel-helmeted riot police, gathered at the former Solidarity headquarters to hurl abuse and shout defiant slogans at the police.

As the police picked up their riot shields to move forward to the demonstrators, youths picked up stones from between adjacent tram tracks and hurled them at the approaching massed ranks.

As the police and demonstrators broke ranks, water cannon and tear gas were fired into the crowd.

A youth who threw a stone at a passing police van was severely beaten in front of Western journalists when the van turned round and its riot police occupants attempted to run him over.

As he fell to the ground they got out and proceeded to beat him unconscious. He was still being beaten when an ambulance arrived to take his limp body away.

Western journalists saw a riot policeman fall to the ground and set upon by a scrum of youths who beat and kicked him until a police car rescued him.

Procession halted

Some 500 demonstrators who infiltrated the official May Day march past in Gdansk managed to halt the procession when they sat down in the middle of the planned route. Police with riot shields and batons waded in to disperse them.

The Government spokesman said between 20 and 30 people were arrested in Gdansk. In the northern city of Poznan police chased demonstrators through streets after some 2,000 Solidarity supporters mounted a counter-march to the official parade.

In Warsaw, a march by 8,000 Solidarity supporters chanting slogans, the name of Lech Walesa and "We don't want Russian rockets," ended peacefully after two hours and following a sit-down in the road by demonstrators. But the leading dissident Jacek Kuron was arrested.

Lech Walesa, the solidarity leader, was kept away from the official May Day march past in Gdansk by riot police.

DEATH TOLL 22 IN FLU OUTBREAK

The death toll in the Stafford influenza outbreak reached 22 yesterday, with the deaths during the night of two men, aged 81 and 78.

Six people were still in the intensive care unit at Stafford District General Hospital and another 63 were being treated in three hospitals, but doctors believed the worst of the epidemic was probably over.

The source of the outbreak is still unknown.

DOUBTS ON DEFENCE BUDGET

By NICHOLAS COMFORT Political Staff

DOUBTS were raised on both sides of the Commons last night about the implications of yesterday's Defence White Paper on the future strength of Britain's conventional forces in general, and the Royal Navy in particular.

Mr Heseltine, Defence Secretary, can expect stiff questioning on the extent to which the resources provided meet the aims stated when he appears before the Defence Select Committee next week.

The £18,000 million defence budget represents a cash increase over last year of more than £1,000 million, and a real annual growth of three per cent.

Mr Heseltine ended speculation that the Navy's surface fleet faced new cuts. He gave a firm commitment to maintaing a force of 50 destroyers and frigates in commission for the foreseeable future, and said tenders would be sought in the next few days for building three more £110 million Type 23 frigates.

NO SURPRISES

Transferring power

Maj-Genl Edward Fursdon, Defence Correspondent, writes: The Defence White Paper contains no surprises. It reviews Britain's strategic thinking and gives full detail of the Government's defence policy deriving therefrom.

The document stresses the benefits arising from transferring manpower from 'tail' to 'teeth'; the advantages of competition in defence equipment procurement; and strongly reaffirms Britain's commitment to multilateral negotiations in the field of arms control and disarmament.

£2m ROYAL PAINTING 'DAMAGED'

By KEITH NURSE Arts Correspondent

A MASTERPIECE by the 18th century English artist George Stubbs from the Queen's Collection has been damaged by an airport forklift truck, it was disclosed yesterday.

The truck rammed into the packing crate containing the 192-year-old oil canvas at Heathrow. On the market such a picture would command a price well in excess of £2 million.

The incident occurred as it was in transit after returning from the United States where it had been on loan for a major exhibition devoted to the artist at the Yale Centre for British Art, New Haven, Connecticut, which ended last month.

A Buckingham Palace spokesman said: "Fortunately it was the crate which was damaged, not the painting." But an art expert at Windsor Castle said: "The situation is not as simple as it seems. Because of the accident paint will flake off, presenting us with a difficult task of restoration."

799 TGWU votes rigged by one man

By MAURICE WEAVER Industrial Staff

AN independent inquiry has found clear evidence of ballot rigging in last year's election for the general secretaryship of the Transport Union. In one case all 799 ballot forms returned by one branch had been filled in by a single person.

A total of eight out of 12 branches in the London and South-East region subjected to close investigation produced "clear indications of malpractices.'

The investigator, Mr John Garnett, 55, director of the Industrial society, refused to identify the eight branches yesterday.

But the regional officials were totally exonerated by Mr Garnett of cheating allegations made against them. "They really played it straight," he said.

Inquiry re-opening

Last night, following criticism from industrial correspondents that his report did not dig deeply enough in some areas, Mr Garnett announced that he was re-opening his inquiry and would be examining documents relating to more branches.

Mr Garnett does not recommend that the union switches to a postal system. But he calls for changes in existing procedures and emphasises that scrutineers must in future be more aware of the risk of fiddling and more suspicious of apparent irregularities.

The re-run ballot, to take place in the first week in June, will be a straight fight between Mr Ron Todd, the Left-wing candidate who won the first election by 44,817 votes, and the moderate challenger, Mr George Wright.

The report presses the union to launch an internal inquiry "rapidly and publicly" into what happened at the eight branches where Mr Garnett is convinced election irregularities occurred last time.

His own feeling, he says, is that "in a few cases people's zealousness overcomes their sense of justice and some people cheat."

Crosses all small

In some cases it was possible that whole 50-page books of ballot papers had been completed and tossed into the ballot box as a "job lot."

At some big branches where all the members worked in te same plant it was easy for officials to sit down and do it themselves "on the basis that they know how the chaps would vote anyway."

Mr Garnett told of one branch where he had questioned the fact that all the crosses were small and looked similar in style. He was told that this was because the membership was predominantly women "and women always do small crosses."

He said: "I didn't think that explanation added up to much and that is one case I want examining."

At one branch he detected that a handful of people had used yellow, green, red and blue pens to "mass produce" the ballot returns but the result had been an easily-recognisable sequence of coloured "X's."

Mr Garnett said that the total number of votes in the eight branches where electroal practices were suspect was 3,600—not enough of themselves to change the outcome.

But at a Press briefing to launch his report yesterday he conceded that it was "always a possibility" that rigging could have gone undetected at any of the 1049 branches in the region not subjected to his in-depth inquiries because of time constraints.

The outcome also raised the question of what would be turned up if similar investigations were carried out in the union's 10 other regions.

BL PROBLEMS WORSENING SAYS CHAIRMAN

By Our Business Correspondent

PROBLEMS facing British Leyland have worsened over the last year, Sir Austin Bide, chairman, said yesterday.

Austin Rover, the volume car producer, faces a "severe test" following November's strike and loss of market share, while product plans are under review because of European emission regulations.

He said that domestic and international markets for Land Rover-Leyland remain "deeply depressed."

There are also "severe pressures" on Leyland Bus because of the slump in domestic business produced by the Government's bus industry de-regulation plans.

Sir Austin's comments, made in the group's annual report and accounts, emerge as the State-controlled company continues to battle against Government plans to cut the £1,800 million investment earmarked for Austin Rover.

Despite progress over the last few years Sir Austin says that further improvements are needed if B L is to achieve its aim of "being a competitive, successful and durable business."

Mr Ray Horrocks, chief executive in charge of the cars business, says in the report that the overall outlook for the British and European motor industry remains uncertain.

Demand for cars in Austin Rover's major markets is expected to remain depressed but the fall in the value of sterling has made exporting more attractive and with its new model range the group is better placed to improve its performance within Europe.

The accounts show the highest paid director, believed to be Mr Horrocks, earned £90,329 last year against £85,900 in 1983. Sir Austin as part-time chairman had an unchanged £65,000 salary.

The Government controls over 98 per cent. of BL shares but there were still 65,000 private shareholders at the end of last year compared with 85,000 in 1980.

NO CASE FOR BL

Zero State aid

Not a penny of taxpayer's money went to British Leyland last year, the Government disclosed yesterday. This was the first year the company, set up in 1975, had received no Government cash aid.

Mr John Butcher, Junior Trade and Industry Minister, said in a Commons written reply to Mrs Ann Winterton, Conservative M P for Congleton, that State funding of B L had dwindled from £250 million in 1981-82 to £90 million in 1983-84 and to nothing in 1984-85.

JPs get guidelines on higher fines for traffic offences

By TERRENCE SHAW Legal Correspondent

SUBSTANTIALLY bigger fines for speeding, reckless driving and drink driving are suggested in the latest guidance to magistrates on penalties for traffic offences from the Magistrates Association.

It also suggested that a driver caught while disqualified, should initially risk custody rather than a fine.

This is because the offence is a blatant disobedience of a court order.

In the list of suggested starting point penalties in the latest issue of THE MAGISTRATE, the association proposes that for reckless driving it should be £300 instead of £120.

Reckless driving

Other recommended increases: Speeding, £2 instead of £1.50 for each mile per hour over the limit. Driving with excess alcohol, £200 rather than £120 for a first offender; Failing to stop after an accident, up from £100 to £125; Failing to report an accident, £50 to £125; Faulty brakes on a goods vehicle, £50 to £125; Overloading commercial vehicles, £200 to £400.

Not a tariff

Another suggestion is that some motorway offences should be dealt with more severely — driving in reverse should earn a £150 fine instead of £75 at present, £200 instead of £100 for driving in the wrong direction, and £150 instead of £100 for making a U-turn.

The suggested penalties, drawn up by the association after consultation with its 57 branches throughout England and Wales, and approved in principle by the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice, are designed to encourage consistency, but not to operate as a tariff, and can be increased or decreased depending on circumstances.

'THAT'S LIFE' DOCTORS IN SETTLEMENT

THE final part of England's most expensive libel action, over allegations against Harley Street slimming expert, Dr Signey Gee, in B B C's "That's Life" programme, was settled in London yesterday—90 days after the case began.

The action has already resulted in the Corporation agreeing to pay £75,000 damages and record costs of £1·2 million.

It ended with a brief announcement that Dr Gee had accepted money paid into court by two doctors who made comments to the "That's Life" team about the doctor's treatment of patients.

Help sought

The hearing was adjourned and the court will sit again today for full details of the settlement to be given.

In the action Dr Gee, 63, accused ESTHER RANTZEN, the B B C, two members of her team, Dr CLEMENCY MITCHELL, a G P, and Dr ROGER BLACKWOOD, a heart specialist, of portraying him as a "unscrupulous profiteering quack."

The alleged libel concerned an item in the programme about Mrs MARGARET DAY, a child care assistant from Binfield, Berks, who went to Dr Gee seeking help in losing weight.

Although the part of the case relating to the B B C was settled last week, Dr Gee's action against the doctors had continued. They denied libel.

During the hearing, the trial judge Mr JUSTICE CROOM-JOHNSON, was promoted to the Court of Appeal.

The settlement means that he can now take his place as a Lord Justice of Appeal and it also opens the way for the hearing by the General Medical Council of a complaint lodged against Dr Gee by Dr Mitchell and Dr Blackwood.

BMA attacked over 'Pill suicides' row

By STEPHEN BATES

THE British Medical Association was accused of irresponsibility yesterday for not investigating controversial allegations made at one of its meetings that two young girls had committed suicide as a result of the High Court ruling last December that doctors should not put under-age girls on the Pill without parental consent.

Mrs Victoria Gillick, the Wisbech woman who brought the original High Court case, now claims she has proof that the allegations about the two girls were untrue.

She said she has telephoned every coroner's office in the country and has failed to trace any record of either case.

As the B M A maintained its position of saying they had nothing to do with the allegations, made by a Yorkshire doctor at a private meeting, and would take no responsibility for them, Mr William Benyon, the Conservative MP for Milton Keynes, criticised their action.

He said: "If these claims were made at the B M A and they were inaccurate and false, they should not have allowed them to be publicised and they should have investigated them. They have been irresponsible."

Mr Benyon put down a series of written Commons questions to Home Office ministers

He was told that no such cases had occurred in Yorkshire, the area where Dr Eileen Wain, the doctor understood to have made the allegations, practises, but when he and other M Ps asked whether cases had been reported elsewhere the Home Office refused to investigate on grounds of cost.

Mrs Gillick, however, now claims to have contacted each of the 140 coroner's courts in the country—at a cost in telephone bills of £60—and to have found no cases of under-age girls having committed suicide in the relevant period.

Airport deal criticised

MPs have criticised the way the contract for the £276 million airport at Mount Pleasant on the Falklands was awarded in a report published yesterday by the powerful All-Party Commons Committee of Public Accounts.

It says the field of competition was restricted to three tenders, and claims that a lower bid could have been obtained with more tenders.

"The Property Services Agency had entered into preliminary discussions with seven leading contractors in the autumn of 1982. After these discussions, six of the firms formed three consortia so as to pool the financial, management and professional resources needed for the job and reduce the risk of any single firm," says the report.

The following May the agency invited the three to submit tenders and the lowest, from Laing - Mowlem - Amey Roadstone, was successful.

"The agency's standing instructions call for 10 tenders to be sought for works contracts. This was clearly impracticable for these quite exceptional projects."

Questioned why no more than three tenders had been obtained, the agency said it believed that in this particular project, with so many unknowns and of such a size, accepting tenders from just three consortia was justified.

REPRIEVED DOG KILLS GIRL OF 2

A "VICIOUS and dangerous" Alsation given a last-minute reprieve from death after attacking three small children later killed a two-year-old girl who was left alone with it, an inquest at North Shields, Tyne and Wear, heard yesterday.

Zara Phillips was bitten seven times on the neck and chest by the Alsatian, a bitch named Kes belonging to her grandfather.

Only a few weeks earlier, Kes had bitten Zara and was taken to a vet's by her aunt to be destroyed.

But Zara's grandfather, Mr David Creagh, 46, went to the vet's and brought the dog back to his flat above a fish-and-chip shop in Buttermere Road, North Shields.

It was there on Jan. 22 that the dog savaged Zara, who had been left alone to play with her cousin Paul, also two, while her mother Maureen worked in the shop and Paul's mother slept upstairs. Zara died the next day in hospital.

Bitter regret

Kes, who had previously bitten Paul and his brother Scott, four, was destroyed after police told the family the injuries had been caused by bites.

The coroner Mr Brian Gallon recorded a verdict of death by misadventure.

He told the family: "What I have had described to me today is a vicious and dangerous animal that has attacked children previously.

"I am sure all the family must bitterly regret the decision to bring that dog back from the vet's following the previous incident."

He added: "I am satisfied there has been a misunderstanding between the lot of you as to who was looking after the child."

He told Zara's 21-year-old mother: "You thought your sister was getting up and coming downstairs and perhaps she was aleep all the time. The result was this dog had a clear field."

Mr Creagh was not called to give evidence and did not attend the hearing.

New law 'too easy on liquidation cheats'

By Our Business Correspondent

GOVERNMENT measures to protect consumers against "cold blooded" liquidation, outlined in the Insolvency Bill now before the Commons, do not go far enough, Sir Gordon Borrie, Director General of Fair Trading, said yesterday.

He called for stronger legislation to safeguard consumers in situations where a company deliberately goes out of business and starts up again within weeks under a new name.

"Human nature will ensure there are always villains and tricksters in trade as elsewhere. There will always be a need, I fear, for the ultimate sanction of new laws to combat the worst mischiefs."

He went on: "Not all companies or trade associations are self-starters in taking the consumer interest into account when adopting new practices or latest technologies. Some may need a gentle push — or even a sharper elbow jab — from me or another source as an initial impetus."

His comments are made in his annual report which shows a sharp rise in consumer complaints about goods and services.

There were 648,425 to local authorities, advice agencies and the Office of Fair Trading in the year to Sep. 30 — an increase of 83,727 over the 1983 figures.

BANKRUPTCY ERROR

Rules tightened

Procedures are being tightened to try to avoid cases where innocent people are named as bankrupts as a result of mistaken identity, a report to MPs by the Ombudsman, Mr Anthony Barrowclough, disclosed yesterday.

He reported the case of a man on whom notice of a receiving order in bankruptcy had been served following a mistake by the Official Receiver's Office, staffed by officers of the Department of Trade and Industry.

It was intended for a man of the same name living in the same area. The Ombudsman said an attempt had been made by an official in the department to stop him investigating the case, but as a result of his investigation it had agreed to pay the man £100. The Treasury Solicitor paid his £100 solicitor's bill.

The Ombudsman said: "It must be a frightening experience to be confronted by someone with the apparent authority to take an inventory of one's possessions

SUPERVISION URGED FOR POLICE DATA

POLICE use of personal information about members of the public should be subject to independent supervision, not left for the police to control, the Consumers' Association said yesterday.

At least one in 10 people and as many as one in six men may have had a local criminal intelligence report written about them, says the association's WHICH? magazine.

"Such reports prepared by the police are partly factual but may also include speculative and unverified information. They include names, addresses, social and business connections, criminal record, places frequented, cars used, description and perhaps political activities," says the magazine.

"As from 1987 new data protection legislation in the U K will mean you will be able to find out what information is held about you on computers, including some police computers, but in practice you'll have very limited access to most information that the police may have about you.

"This is because manually stored information will not be covered by the Act and many police records are still not computerised; some personal information relating to national security will be exempt from the legislation; and you will not be able to find out what information police have on you if it is likely to 'prejudice the prevention or detection of crime.'"

'TOO MANY' LONG-TERM JOBLESS

By ANTHONY LOOCH

THE level of long-term unemployment is "far too high" and is a matter of grave concern, Mr King, Employment Secretary, told the Commons Employment Select Committee yesterday.

Mr King and Mr Peter Morrison, Minister of State for Employment, were giving evidence to the committee, which is investigating the Manpower Services Commission corporate plan for 1985-89.

Mr King said measures had been introduced in the last Budget to reduce the level of long-term unemployed.

Mr Tony Baldry (C., Banbury) complained of "irresponsible knocking" of the Youth Training Scheme. He referred to the previous week when two MPs, Mr David Nellist (Lab., Coventry SE) and Mr Terry Fields (Lab., Broadgreen) supported a Left-wing sponsored "strike" of schoolchildren, in protest against alleged Government plans to "conscript" 16 and 17-year-olds into the new two-year scheme.

'Contemptible strike'

Mr Morrison said the strike had been "contemptible" and disgraceful. It was politically motivated and might unfortunately convince some 15 or 16-year-olds, who might benefit from the scheme, that they should not join it.

Mr Gordon Brown (Lab, Dunfermline E) said the Government had not increased its contribution of £1,100 million towards YTS, even though the scheme had been lengthened from one year to two.

Mr King replied that the Government was looking to industry to make "a significant contribution" towards the costs of the extended scheme.

The committee's chairman, Mr Ron Leighton (Lab, Newham NE), said it appeared to some people that the Government was trying to get the two-year scheme "on the cheap."

Shipyard men claim betrayal

By JOHN PETTY
Shipping Correspondent

UNION leaders reacted angrily yesterday to a call for 600 redundancies at Scott Lithgow, the Clyde shipyards saved from total closure 13 months ago when Trafalgar House bought them from British Shipbuilders for £12 million.

There are 2,500 workers at the Greenock and Port Glasgow business which lost the confidence of shipowners and oil companies through late deliveries under British Shipbuilders.

Trafalgar House has fought hard to restore the lost reputation, but has failed to gain a single new contract.

Shop stewards said they were "shocked and dismayed" and there would be a mass meeting of workers today.

The only work left in the yard is the much-delayed rig for Britoil.

Trafalgar House has tried to persuade the Government to give orders for submarines to Scott Lithgow, so far with no success.

Mr Eric Parker, group chief executive of Trafalgar, said yesterday that it had been envisaged at the time of the takeover that the workforce would be cut from 2,800 to 1,500 by the end of last year if no new work could be found.

'GADDAFI WAR' KILLER DUMPED GUN IN BATH

THE professional killer who executed a Libyan adventurer in a London flat in the wake of the terror campaign against Gaddafi opponents last year left his silenced pistol in a bathful of water to destroy forensic evidence.

A Westminster inquest was told yesterday that he also dumped in the bath six bullets, a knife, a notebook and pen he had used to write a vengeance note, and an ashtray with cigarette ends.

Det. Con. JOHN LOADER told the inquest: "My immediate thought was that they had been put into the bath to remove finger marks and saliva."

ALI EL-GIAHOUR, 45, had been hit twice in the face, forced so violently to his knees that one was bruised, and shot once in the back of the head at a range of only 18 inches.

Beside his body was a note in Arabic which said: "This is the punishment for the one who is employed to do a job and does not succeed in doing it. Signed Al-Fatih Forever and the Committees Everywhere."

"Al-Fatih" means conqueror, and has been used in the past to refer to Col Gaddafi.

The "committees" are thought to refer to the Libyan People's Bureau, outside which WPC Yvonne Fletcher was murdered a year ago.

Cold and calculated

Recording a verdict of unlawful killing, the coroner, Dr PAUL KNAPMAN, described it as "an efficient, cold, calculated killing.

"By any standard the person doing this had been most professional. He left behind in a bath every major thing that would attribute the death to the perpetrator.

"It is obvious this is a murder, quite clearly a carefully planned and meticulously executed murder."

Tripoli-born el-Giahour, a father of six, had been charged in March 1984 with conspiracy over six bomb attacks in London, including one at an Arabic restaurant in Mayfair which injured 23.

Another Arab was later jailed for 15 years. el-Giahour was released on bail in May despite strong police objections.

In August police broke into a flat in Bickenhall Mansions, off Baker Street, after neighbours complained of a smell. They found the Libyan's decomposing body. He had been dead for several days.

Det Chief Insp ANGUS MACKINTOSH, of the Anti-Terrorist branch, said the man who rented the flat for a week was not el-Giahour. He spoke Arabic and claimed to be Moroccan.

The killer had left £72 in cash on the sofa, and no attempt had been made to take el-Giahour's expensive gold watch and ring.

Dr Knapman said: "By any standards this is an efficient, cold, calculated killing?"

Mr Mackintosh replied: "Beyond a doubt. The position of the body, the neat way the shoes had been placed alongside it, showed it had been a cool, calculated act."

Bent to the wind

Det. Sgt HAROLD ELBOURNE, also of the Anti-Terrorist branch, said that about the time of the death of WPc Fletcher it was obvious there were two Libyan factions in Britain—pro- and anti-Gaddafi.

It was difficult to say where el-Giahour stood.

"He went with the wind. If it was to his advantage he was pro-Gaddafi, and if it was to his advantage he would be anti-Gaddafi. But I would lean towards the pro-Gaddafi because that is where his business was."

He described el-Giahour as a "Mister Fixit," adding: "He arranged anything for anybody and took a commission on what was being done."

Asked by Dr Knapman whether this meant anything legal or illegal, he replied: "Yes sir."

Sgt Elbourne said: "Our inquiries have not found anyone that will admit doing business with him. He lived a flamboyant and expensive lifestyle. It is difficult to know where the money came from from that lifestyle."

Nurse Jill Sanderson, 27, unable to contain her exuberance yesterday when she spoke for the first time about ending seven weeks in an isolation "bubble".

Breeze is a joy for Lassa fever nurse

By COLIN RANDALL

NURSE Jill Sanderson, the midwife who was flown home by the RAF after catching Lassa fever while working in Sierra Leone, spoke yesterday of her disbelief on waking up in a plastic tent in Bristol to be told what she was suffering from.

Miss Sanderson, 27, who spent seven weeks in the isolation "bubble" at Ham Green hospital before being allowed out last Friday, said:

"I was absolutely astonished. I just couldn't believe it, though I couldn't say I was frightened.

"I was still feeling fairly confused because I didn't remember anything of what had been going on. I suppose somehow you never think it is going to happen to you. Although I had nursed mothers with Lassa fever, I had never thought of myself as being in danger."

Walking again

She posed cheerfully for photographers in the grounds of Ham Green, wearing a jumper bearing the knitted Christian names of the two doctors, physiotherapist and 19 nurses who have cared for her in the infectious diseases unit.

Although in a wheelchair, she is already able to walk again, and hopes to leave hospital in the next 10 days to complete her convalescence at her parents' home in Knaresborough, Yorkshire.

The most exciting feature of leaving the tent is being able to shake hands and embrace people, and to feel the breeze on her face, she said.

She lay in a coma for a week after contracting a high fever in Sierra Leone, where she had been working in voluntary overseas service at a health centre at Panguma, 200 miles from Freetown.

Lassa fever was diagnosed and she was treated at an American research hospital at Setbwema before being flown home on board a specially-equipped RAF VC-10 on March 8.

Strength of faith

Dr Stuart Glover, the Ham Green specialist in infectious diseases who headed the team nursing her, said she owes her life to the exceptional standard of medical care she received in West Africa.

She had been treated with an anti-viral drug, Ribavarin, which had been used previously for other infections but was still at an experimental stage in connection with Lassa fever.

Dr Glover added: "Jill also has tremendous courage, fortitude and a great deal of religious faith — and you can never dissociate such qualities from the process of getting better."

Jockey Club fine Piggott trainer

By GUY RAIS

CHAMPION trainer Henry Cecil was fined £2,000 by stewards of the Jockey Club yesterday for a breach of rules concerning retainers for Lester Piggott.

The disciplinary inquiry followed allegations that Piggott — then stable jockey at Cecil's Newmarket yard—had requested and received payment over and above the retainer which must be registered with Weatherbys, the Jockey Club administrators.

Shortly before Cecil was fined, Walter Swinburn, appearing before the same stewards disciplinary committee, was banned from riding for 21 days for reckless riding a week ago at Epsom.

It meant that Swinburn will not only miss his Classic ride on Dafayna, second favourite for today's 1,000 Guineas, but the ride on Shadeed, favourite for Saturday's 2,000 Guineas.

Last season

Piggott at 49, riding in what is expected to be his last season as a jockey, stepped straight into the plum ride on Shadeed.

Ironically, Piggott appeared as a witness in the Cecil inquiry which followed the banning of Swinburn.

After hearing evidence from Cecil, who was legally represented, and Piggott, the committee found Cecil to have been in breach of Rule 75, which states "... the terms of all agreements must be registered at the racing calendar office."

Both Piggott and Cecil left the inquiry at the Jockey Club headquarters in Portman Square without commenting. The maximum fine for the offence is £3,000.

'No regular checks' on beaten baby Jasmine

By LIN JENKINS

THERE were no regular medical checks made on little JASMINE BECKFORD after she returned to the care of her parents even while she was still considered at risk from beatings, the independent inquiry into her death was told yesterday.

Before social workers decided to remove her name from the non-accidental injury register seven months after her return home, no G.P or paediatrician examined her for signs of abuse or maltreatment.

Dr JOHN WARNER, consultant paediatrician at St. Charles Hospital, Kensington, told the inquiry at Brent Town Hall at his surprise at the lack of medical care and of his concern at not being invited to meetings where major decisions about Jasmine's future were taken.

He said he first saw Jasmine and her sister Louise in August, 1981, when they were admitted to hospital with fractures which he said in his opinion were "non-accidental."

Jasmine was well below the normal weight for a child of 20 months but made considerable improvement while in hospital.

Emotionally deprived

When he later visited the two girls at the home of foster parents Peter and Gay Probert "they looked extremely healthy, very happy. It tends to suggest they were emotionally deprived previously and not properly stimulated."

Jasmine died on July 5, 1984, of head injuries and a post mortem examination made it clear she had been the subject of torture and brutality for many months.

Her stepfather MAURICE BECKFORD, 25, was jailed for 10 years at the Old Bailey in March for manslaughter and his common law wife BEVERLY LORRINGTON 25, received 18 months for wilful neglect and cruelty.

The inquiry is to ascertain how Jasmine died in such appalling circumstances and to make recommendations to prevent a repeat of the tragedy.

The inquiry was adjourned until today.

WOMAN, 33, SHOT DEAD IN BED

A HOTEL owner's wife, Mrs Cheryl Calvert died yesterday after being blasted with a shotgun as she lay in bed with her four-year-old daughter. When police arrived at her secluded farmhouse on the Isle of Wight, they found Robert Simpson dead from shotgun wounds with a gun lying nearby.

They said no one else was being sought in connection with the incident.

Thirty-three-year-old Mrs Calvert's daughter Annabel lay screaming in bed with pellets embedded in her leg while her brother Charles, six, ran to a neighbouring farmer for help.

Mr Fred Long, of Rew Street, Northwood, said Charles told him his mother had been shot. "Charlie was marvellous about it all. He was very grown-up as he told me what had happened. I calmed him down and then called the police.

Pellets removed

"When they arrived they went down to the house and took the little girl to hospital to have the pellets removed from her leg.

"She was in a bad way, but after she had been to hospital to have the pellets removed she settled down

Mrs Calvert's husband, Malcolm, 50, was too distressed to talk about the incident

The Calverts, who had been married for 10 years, had been living apart and divorce proceedings had started. She was living in their house at Hillis Farm while he lived at the hotel.

Mr Simpson, 24, was the son of Mr Colin Simpson who retired as chief executive of South Wight Borough Council earlier this year.

He lives with his parents at Manor Farm, Mill Road, Shalfleet, Isle of Wight, and had been seen escorting Mrs Calvert in Newport public houses in recent weeks.

BATMAN APPOINTED

Nicaragua miscalculation by US

SANDINISTA REGIME MOVED STEADILY LEFTWARD

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

EVER since President Taft sent American Marines into Nicaragua in 1912, the country has rarely been spared the close attentions of Washington.

Over the years, the United States has deeply involved itself in Nicaraguan politics, has helped to train its soldiers and even supervised one of its elections, a classic case of the big Yanqui brother from the north putting a banana republic straight.

But just as the United States miscalculated in Cuba, so it has done in recent years in Nicaragua.

Matters began to come to a head in the late 1970s when the dictator Anastasio Somoza, who had always enjoyed the support of Washington, suddenly realised that not only was his regime facing a guerrila army called the Sandinistas, but that the insurgents had popular support throughout the country.

The same realisation dawned at the White House, where it was decided that Somoza's hold on office was weakening at an alarming rate. He was "encouraged" to surrender and the United States welcomed the Sandinistas, particularly when they professed to be intent on bringing democracy to a land that had rarely known it.

Carter preoccupied

Somoza finally gave up and fled into exile in July, 1979, leaving the capital, Managua, to the Sandinistas. They take their name from Augusto Sandino, an army general turned rebel who was assassinated in 1933, some say with United States connivance.

With President Carter preoccupied by the Iran hostage crisis, Washington did not perhaps give all the attention it might have done to the subsequent developments in Nicaragua.

The Sandinistas quickly began to consolidate their rule, forming a junta in which the more radical Left-wingers such as Tomas Borge and Daniel Ortega soon made life uncomfortable for the moderates who had supported the revolution.

By the time President Reagan took office in January, 1981,

President Daniel Ortega, made life difficult for the moderates.

the Marxists in the junta were well established as the chief policy-makers.

Only three days after Mr Reagan was sworn in, the United States suspended economic aid to Nicaragua. In the previous September, President Carter had assured congress that the Sandinistas were not assisting Left-wing insurgents in other countries, including El Salvador.

But, citing United States intelligence reports purporting to show Nicaraguan weapons clandestinely entering El Salvador, Mr Reagan made the aid cut-off decision.

The Sandinistas denied the accusations, but at the same time went about strengthening their relations with Cuba and the Kremlin. The Nicaraguan armed forces began receiving military hardware from the Communist bloc, most of it channelled through Cuba.

Spying network

On the domestic front, the Sandinistas followed the Cuban model by introducing "committees for the defence of the revolution" in every urban neighbourhood, what amounts to a highly effective spying network that is able to monitor the activities of ordinary people.

The Sandinistas also formulated a new education law which seeks to dilute the influence of the many schools run by the Roman Catholic Church.

In the United States, Mr Reagan began to take a highly visible personal role in the propaganda battle with the Sandinistas, accusing them of trying to give international Communism a foothold on the American mainland and of fomenting subversion in countries friendly to Washington.

But there was also a secret side to Mr Reagan's policy. In November, 1981, he approved funds for a covert war against the Sandinistas, to be run by the CIA.

The operation did not remain secret for very long. Details began to leak out in the following March, provoking a wave of criticism in Congress, whose members maintained they had not been fully briefed on the extent of the secret action.

General Anastasio Somoza, fled into exile in 1979.

Later in the year, Congress banned funds for "overthrowing" the Sandinstas and encouraged a diplomatic peace effort by other Latin American governments in the region.

Early in 1983, the Contadora peace initiative was launched, so named for the island off the coast of Panama where the government representatives of Venezuela, Colombia, Mexico and Panama first met to begin the process.

Honduras manoeuvres

Mr Reagan declared his support for the Contadora effort, but at the same time authorised the Pentagon to begin a series of military manoeuvres in Honduras that were plainly intended to intimidate the Sandinistas.

These manoeuvres are still going on and have enabled the American army to construct a network of supply bases, air strips and communications facilities on Honduran territory. The Sandinistas say that this infrastructure is for use by Honduran and American troops who intend to invade their country.

In November, 1983, Congress took Mr Reagan's warnings seriously and approved $24 million in aid for the "Contra" rebel army of Nicaraguan exiles that had been trained with the help of the CIA.

Harbours mined

But last year, Capitol Hill was "shocked" to learn of some of the CIA's activities. It was disclosed that the agency was behind the mining of Nicaraguan harbours, which led to several cargo ships from other countries being damaged.

The CIA also issued an instruction manual to the rebels in which they were told how to assassinate civilian officials.

Congress reacted by suspending further aid to the Contras.

Last summer, Mr Shultz, the American Secretary of State, met Senor Ortega, the Sandinista junta leader, and it was agreed that regular bilateral talks should be held. Several sessions took place in secret in Mexico, but the talks were broken off in January by Washington.

In March, Mr Reagan finally stated publicly that he wanted to see the Sandinistas removed from office and he called on Congress to resume military aid for the Contra rebels.

But in a stunning reversal for the White House, Congress not only blocked new military assistance, but also barred even humanitarian aid such as food and medicines, for the rebel cause.

Arms sale curbs likely by Western Europe

By DAVID ADAMSON Diplomatic Correspondent

THE United States informed Britain before it applied sanctions against Nicaragua, but has not asked the Government to follow suit.

Foreign Office officials refused to comment yesterday on the American move, but the British view that sanctions are counter-productive is well-known.

The most Britain is likely to do is impose a tacit embargo on arms sales similar to that in force for Cuba, also subject to American sanctions.

Other West European countries, including France—which at one time seemed anxious to sell weapons to Nicaragua—are expected to adopt a similar course, with the result that Nicaragua, like Cuba, will be totally dependent on Soviet supplies.

British antipathy to sanctions is based on experience dating back to their imposition on Italy by the League of Nations after the invasion of Abyssinia.

Forlorn weapon

Their failure to bring about a rapid collapse of the Smith government in Rhodesia merely reinforced the view that they are a rather forlorn weapon of last resort.

However, Britain was a party to the sanctions introduced after the declaration of martial law in Poland and, with other Western countries, it applies a ban on the sale of computers and other high technology goods to the Soviet Union.

Despite their less-than-spectacular record, sanctions do have an impact. American sanctions have forced the Soviet Union to spend billions of pounds on maintaining the Cuban economy.

The Nicaraguans are not as dependent on American trade and money as Cuba was in the 1950s, but the Russians are hardly likely to welcome the prospect of having to put them on the pay-roll.

SANCTIONS 'WON'T WORK'

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

A FORMER diplomat who helped implement the American trade embargo against Cuba 25 years ago said yesterday that similar action announced by President Reagan against Nicaragua would not work.

Mr Wayne Smith, who was in the United States Embassy in Havana in 1960, said: "It didn't work then and it won't work now. In the long run they will find alternative outlets for their exports and will get their imports elsewhere too."

Mr Smith, now a lecturer in Latin American affairs at Johns Hopkins University in Washington, has visited Nicaragua frequently and believes the Sandinisats are too well entrenched to be brought down by such tactics.

Mr Shultz, the Secretary of State, said in an interview with the WASHINGTON POST: "It's not going to be an overpowering event. But there's a certain sense of feeling that regardless of the effect, certain kinds of relationships with countries we think are doing a lot of damage are undesirable."

Republican welcome

The embargo was welcomed by some Republicans in Congress, who are still smarting from last week's defeat by the Democrats of Mr Reagan's proposal for giving new military aid to Nicaraguan rebels.

But Mr Reginald Norton, an official of the Church-supported Washington Office on Latin America thought the move could increase European opposition to America's handling of the Nicaragua issue.

Mr Larry Birns of the Council on Hemispheric Affairs, a liberal "think-tank," agreed. "The Reagan Administration seriously under-estimates the strength of the anti-Washington movement in Europe on the Nicaragua question," he said. "What is going to happen is that the Western Europeans will make up the trade difference."

A prominent Republican who opposes the embargo is Mr Robert Michel, the party leader in the House of Representatives.

He said he was "troubled" by such moves and recalled that Washington was severely criticised for the Soviet grain embargo and the attempt to bar the sale of gas pipeline equipment to the Russians.

Economy 'in a mess'

Mr Donald Regan, White House chief of staff, said in a television interview from Bonn that the Nicaraguan economy was already "in a mess".

"They owe over $5 billion (in foreign debt).

Financial sources in Washington said that Mawagua was more than $12 million behind in its scheduled repayments for $147 million in loans from the World Bank.

Informants said yesterday that other action that may be taken by Mr Reagan could include a break in diplomatic relations and recognition of a Nicaraguan government in exile.

TWO-YEAR HOLD ON AIRCREW

By Our Auckland Correspondent

New Zealand's Defence Council is so worried by a manpower drain from the Air Force that it has declared that certain aircrew must give two years' notice before they can leave.

By declaring a state of critical manning the council intends to halt the exodus of pilots, navigators and air electronics officers being recruited by the country's civil airlines.

BOMBER JAILED

An Indonesian court yesterday jailed Melta Halim, 32, for 34 years for taking part in three bomb attacks on property owned by the Chinese minority in Jakarta in October in which two people were killed. Eight other people are awaiting trial on similar charges.

Reagan budget cuts under fire in Senate

By DAVID SHEARS in Washington

THE battle of the Red Ink began in earnest on Capitol Hill yesterday as the Senate began debating amendments that could undercut President Reagan's plan to slash the American budget deficit.

As Mr Reagan flew to Bonn on Tuesday night, the Senate managed to give him a good send-off for the economic summit meeting by approving the plan in principle.

But the vote was only 50-49 and it was seen as no more than a symbolic gesture to give the President something to boast about to his six heads-of-government colleagues.

The President's victory could prove short-lived, for the first amendment taken up yesterday was to remoe one of the most controversial spending cuts of all. This is Mr Reagan's proposal, as part of his deficit-reduction package, to hold increases in social security benefits to less than the rate of inflation.

Many senators, bith Republicans and Democrats, are sensitive to this proposal, which is designed to save $3 billion (£2·4 billion) in the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

Three-year package

All told, the President's three-year package is aimed at halving the shortfall in America's national finances, which is estimated this year at $222 billion (£171 billion).

In the 1985-86 fiscal year alone, the plan would narrow the deficit by $52 billion (£42 billion). Cumulative spending cuts in the next three financial years would add up to $300 billion (£242 billion).

ut even if Congress were to approve the budget-reducing plan as it stands—which would be a miracle—these projections would hardly come true. For they are based on predictions of US economic growth and revenues that are already proving over-optimistic.

The significance of Tuesday's hairsbreadth Senate victory for the President and his Republican party was diminished by the disclosure that it was achieved only by dint of sleight-of-hand.

For instance, Senator Alfanse D'Amato, a New York Republican, said he had voted in favour only after he had been assured by the party leadership that I will have the opportunity to restore the social security cost-of-living increase, which should not have been in the package in the first place."

He suggested that instead of curbing social security benefits the government should raise company taxes — an idea Mr Reagan has staunchly opposed.

70 amendments

Other controversial features of the deficit-cutting plan have given rise to some 70 proposed amendments. If they are all adopted, the Reagan package will be thoroughly emasculated.

The proposed social security restriction could hold benefit increases to two percentage points below the rate of inflation, instead of allowing full indexing as provided by present law.

Railways, medical care for the elderly, education and federal aid to cities are among the other victims of the Reagan axe. Defence spending would rise in the years ahead by three per cent, after allowing for inflation—only half the rate Mr Reagan originally proposed.

U.S. 'PLAYING POLITICS' OVER SHOOTING

By NIGEL WADE in Moscow

Russia accused the United States yesterday of playing politics with the case of the American major shot dead in March by a Soviet soldier in East Germany.

Again spurning American claims for an apology and compensation, Tass news agency hinted Washington was trying to use the affair to divert attention from President Reagan's controversial planned visit to a West German war cemetery.

"There is every indication that a calculation is made on poisoning the atmosphere and at the same time trying to divert attention from Washington's recent steps that have caused broad protests," Tass said.

Panama protest over British nuclear cargo

By DAVID ADAMSON Diplomatic Correspondent

THE Panamanian Government is attempting to bar the Panama Canal to ships carrying cargoes of radioactive nuclear materials.

The latest in a number of hitherto undisclosed protests was made to the British Government in the past week. Other countries which have received similar notes are the United States, France and Japan.

Under the 1977 basic treaty on the operation and use of the canal, there are no restrictions on nuclear cargoes. The parallel but separate United States—Panama treaty on its neutrality allows the Americans to send nuclear warships and weapons through the canal.

Panamanian sources say the protest invoked the 1977 treaty protecting the neutrality of the canal.

Reports from Panama claim that its Foreign Minister, Senor Cardoze Fabrega, protested to the United States (which is responsible for operating the canal) and Britain about a British ship which passed through the canal at night on April 19 "with radioactive material destined for somewher in the western United States."

Flasks of uranium

British sources insist, however, that the only British ship carrying a nuclear cargo which passed through the canal recently did so on the night of April 23-24.

This was British Nuclear Fuel's Pacific Swan, carrying 20 flasks of depleted uranium from Japan for reprocessing at Sellafield.

The Pacific Swan is one of a fleet of four ships specially designed to carry radioactive materials. They make 16 transits a year through the canal, carrying the spent uranium from Japan to Britain and returning with the empty flasks.

Ethiopia militiamen oust 50,000 famine victims from camp

By KENNETH CLARKE

ETHIOPIAN militiamen had forced more than 50,000 famine victims to leave an emergency feeding centre in a three-day operation and then apparently burned the camp down, according to relief sources.

No official explanation was given yesterday for the evacuation of Ibnet camp in Gondar region, about 250 miles north-west of Addis Ababa.

It was apparently carried out by local militia members who gave the famine victims 33lbs of dry rations each, equivalent to the amount handed out in a month, and told them to make for feeding centres in their native regions in Tigre and Wolo.

Relief officials said they feared many would not be able to make the journey.

It was not the first time the Marxist government of Lt-Col Mengistu had forcibly moved drought relief recipients many of whom were initially relocated from their home villages.

Gunpoint order

Last November more than 5,000 nomadic Afar tribesmen were ordered at gunpoint from a feeding station at Bati, north-east of Addis Ababa. They were taken to another camp et up by the Army on the edge of the Danakil desert, where herders traditionally live.

Ethiopian officials at the time said it was difficult to get famine victims to move since they feared they would be deprived of regular rations. A statement explaining the latest operation is expected today.

The Mengistu regime has maintained that its "movement of population" project is voluntary but Western governments have suggested starving refugees were being forced to move for internal political reasons.

However, one relief official said in regard to the latest incident that the authorities may "simply have wanted to move the drought victims to their native areas.'

The government has tried to keep together tribal groups in the ethnically diverse country of 40 million people.

Uneasy truce in Lebanon

By CON COUGHLIN in Beirut

AN uneasy ceasefire settled across Lebanon yesterday after Israeli-backed Christian militias brought the advance by Moslem militias through Christian villages to a halt.

Intermittent artillery exchanges interrupted the ceasefire in southern Lebanon and Beirut after political leaders on both sides agreed to bring the fighting to an end.

The heaviest fighting was in southern Lebanon where an alliance of Druze and Moslem militias have made a devastating advance through Christian villages east of the port of Sidon.

The sweep through the Christian communities went largely unchecked until Moslem militias pushing through Kfar Falous ran into a detachment of the self-styled South Lebanese Army, the Israeli-backed Christian militia charged with protecting the Lebanese border once Israeli troops have completed their withdrawal.

Leaders negotiate

After nearly 20 hours of heavy fighting in which both sides used tanks, mortars and heavy machineguns, the Christian militias brought the advance to a halt.

After negotiations between Mr Walid Jumblatt, Druze leader, Mr Nabih Berri, Shi'ite Moslem leader, and Christian leaders, the Moslem militias agreed to halt their advance.

Several people were killed and many wounded during the fighting in Kfar Falous, which is just 10 miles from Jezzine, the last Christian stronghold in southern Lebanon.

Moslem militias launched their attack on Christian villages in southern Lebanon after the Israeli withdrawal in an attempt to achieve greater political influence in the area.

PEKING HOTEL PROJECT BY MURDOCH

Mr Rupert Murdoch's News Corporation has announced it is to build an international hotel and press centre in Peking in a joint venture with the Chinese Government.

Mr Ken Cowley, News Corporation director, said yesterday the venture would provide modern equipment for the international print and electronic news media.

The building would be on the same site as a new television centre for China Central Television and would have 300 single hotel rooms as well as 100 apartments for residential or office space.—Reuter.

TEACHER IN SPACE PLAN

By TONY ALLEN-MILLS in New York

AFTER recently sending into space a Senator, two monkeys and some rats American space agency officials yesterday narrowed their search for a schoolteacher astronaut.

From more than 40,000 applications NASA has compiled a short-list of 118 men and women.

The aim of the "Teacher in Space Project" is to give a Shuttle seat next January to an American whose life has been dedicated to teaching and who will be able to communicate the enormity of the space programme's achievements.

One nominee, Barry Schwartz of Wichita, wrote in his application that he would like during the mission to investigate the effects of weightlessness on playground equipment.

One day Mr Schwartz envisages families spending long periods in space, and he wants to know how the children will be kept amused. Will swings swing? Will slides slide? These questions NASA so far as not answered.

Strike grounds Brazil flights

International flights to Brazil were badly hit as strikes by transport workers posed the first major political challenge to the new civilian government of President Jose Sarney.

Local and international traffic at San Paulo and Rio de Janeiro airports was almost at a standstill because of the strike by aircrew and ground workers, which is rapidly spreading with train, bus and underground staff due to join the strike in support of higher pay.

Exocet attack

A Turkish tanker, the 72,000-ton Burak M, escaped with minimal damage and no casualties off Iran after being hit by an Exocet missile fired by an Iraqi plane, shipping sources reported.

Swedish strike talks

The Swedish government ordered a mediating commission to resume negotiations with unions in a final effort to avoid a public servant pay strike that will cripple the country. Union leaders said, however, a solution was "extremely unlikely" and their strike would take effect from midday today.

Greenpeace threat at Antwerp

Activists from the environmental group Greenpeace boarded a waste disposal ship in Antwerp port to protest against the dumping of toxic waste at sea, port officials said.

A spokesman said Greenpeace would block the port if the Belgian government failed to meet an ultimatum demanding an end to the waste dumping.

Clash near Thai border

At least 10 Cambodian soldiers from the Hanoi-backed Heng Samrin government were killed or wounded and Khmer guerrillas suffered similar casualtics during a four-hour battle about 10 miles south of the Thai border town of Aranyaprathet, Thai military sources said.

Meanwhile, Pol Pot, 60, the Khmer Rouge leader, was reported to be in a Peking hospital suffering from malaria and high blood pressure.

Sudan 'seeks links'

Sudan's new military rulers want good relations with Libya and Ethiopa, but also seem keen to preserve links with such American allies as Egypt and Britain, Mr Richard Luce, Foreign Office Minister of State, said after visiting Khartoum.

Gallup Poll

TORIES IN 2½pc LEAD FOR LOCAL ELECTIONS

THE Conservatives have a 2½ per cent. lead over Labour in voting intentions for today's local elections in England and Wales, according to a Gallup Poll conducted for THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in the areas concerned.

The poll gives the Tories 36 per cent., Labour 33½ per cent., and the Liberal/S D P Alliance 29 per cent. But only 55 per cent. say they are very likely to vote.

When asked whether it mattered who wins the local elections, 43 per cent. said it mattered a lot, 17 per cent. said it mattered a little, and 38 per cent. said it didn't matter.

Just over one in three, 38 per cent, were "very concerned" about the level of rates in their area, with 27 per cent. "Somewhat concerned," 22 per cent. "not very concerned" and nine per cent. "not concerned at all."

Despite this concern about the level of rates, a majority, 58 per cent., were at least "fairly satisfied" with the way their local council was running things, while 21 per cent. were "not very satisfied" and 13 per cent. were "not at all satisfied."

A majority, 53 per cent., blamed the Government for recent increases in rates, while 31 per cent. blamed local authorities.

Party lines

Naturally there were divisions along party lines in the replies to this question, with a majority of Conservatives blaming the local authorities, and majorities of both Labour and Alliance supporters blaming the Government.

In spite of the concern about increasing rates, one in two, 49 per cent., wanted more spent on local services even if it meant further rate rises.

Replies to the question: "People have different views about whether it is more important to reduce rates or keep up local government spending. How about you? Which of these statements comes closest to your own?" were:

Rates being cut, even if it means some reduction in local services, such as schools, housing, and welfare facilities: 14.

Things should be left as they are: 30.

Local services such as schools, housing and welfare facilities should be extended even if it means some increases in rate: 49.

Limits approved

On the other hand, the balance of opinion approved, by a margin of 45 per cent. to 37 per cent., of the Government limiting the amount of rate increase that a local council can levy.

Again there were significant differences by party supported, with a majority of Conservatives, 64 per cent., approving and a majority of Labour supporters, 53 per cent., disapproving. Alliance supporters tended on balance to approve.

Gallup also asked people whether they would approve or disapprove of a local income tax to replace rates, and a similar question about a poll tax in place of the rates. The replies to these two questions were:

| | Local income tax | Poll tax |
|---|---|---|
| Approve | 34 | 42 |
| Disapprove | 35 | 39 |
| Don't know | 30 | 18 |

Another way to try to reduce costs is the privatisation of certain services. People in the counties were almost evenly divided on this question, with 47 per cent agreeing with the idea and 44 per cent. disagreeing.

When asked which services should be run by private firms, those supporting the idea put refuse collection at the top of the list, mentioned by 54 per cent. of the group. This was followed by street cleaning (51 per cent.), housing repairs (31 per cent.), road repairs (30 per cent.), and public transport (29 per cent.). Further down were house building (24 per cent.), and gas supplies (11 per cent.).

Rate referendum

As always, when asked if they wanted an opportunity to be involved in the decision-making process, this time through a local referendum before the council could pass a major rate increase, a majority, 70 per cent., approved of the idea. Less than one in five, 16 per cent., disapproved and 14 per cent were undecided.

Although the public generally approved of the idea of the Government limiting rate increases, almost one in two (42 per cent.) felt that the local councils do not have enough independence from the Government. On the other hand, 12 per cent. felt they have too much independence, and 34 per cent. thought the relationship was about right.

This Gallup Poll was conducted between April 24 and 29 among a representative quota sample of 630 electors in the English and Welsh non-metropolitan county councils, where voting takes place today. The "don't knows" excluded from the voting figures amounted to eight per cent.

Lords 'sign own death warrant'

By Our Political Staff

THE House of Lords signed its own death warrant by refusing on Tuesday to give London an elected city-wide authority to replace the G L C, Mr Wedgwood Benn said yesterday.

Mr Benn, a long-standing campaigner for the abolition of the Lords, argued that the Upper House's rejection of the proposal by just four votes was a serious blow against democracy by a non-elected chamber.

He declared that it would be appropriate for the Lords to be wound up by legislation worded identically to that promoted by the Government to scrap the G L C, namely that it "shall cease to exist."

Abolition of the Lords was one of four proposals Mr Benn put forward for a "new Reform Bill" in a speech to the Parliamentary press gallery at Westminster.

The M P for Chesterfield said that he hoped himself to play a part in promoting such "constitutional change" to strengthen the role of the Commons.

"The House of Commons is now far too weak to do the job for which it was elected," said Mr Benn. "The time has come when it needs to be strengthened in its relations to the executive by the passage of a new Reform Bill.

"Political power is everywhere becoming ever more centralised, internationalised, authoritarian and secretive, and the House of Commons is in real danger of becoming a decorative part of our constitution.

"Such a bill would have to establish or re-establish the power of the Commons.

Leading 'rate rebel' council gives in

By Our Local Government Correspondent

THE policy and resources committee of Southwark Borough Council — which has been in the forefront of the fight against the Government rate-capping legislation — agreed by 11 votes to two to set a rate 10 per cent. below the present level yesterday.

This decision is subject to ratification by the full council, but Mr Graham Geddes, deputy council leader, said the tactic of refusing to set a rate had outlived its usefulness.

The council had the resources to ensure that there were no cuts in jobs and services.

It could also spend a further £6 million on housing repairs.

Five of the original 18 rate-capped councils are still holding out—Lambeth and Greenwich in South London, Camden, Islington and Hackney in North London and Sheffield in South Yorkshire.

Liverpool, which is not rate-capped, is also refusing to set rate.

The High Court has ordered Hackney to set a rate by the end of this month and the district auditors have warned rebel councillors that time is running out.

Greenham women win the vote—and spurn it

By TERENCE SHAW Legal Correspondent

SEVEN Greenham Common peace women had their right to vote in the Newbury area upheld by the Court of Appeal yesterday in an important judgment defining the qualifications for entry on an electoral register.

Sir John Donaldson, Master of the Rolls, and two other judges ruled that the women had shown they were resident in the area and their residence had not been shown to be unlawful.

But, in the circumstances it had not been shown that they were actually living on common land covered by an injunction obtained by Newbury district council against three of them.

The judgment still appeared, though, to leave open the possibility of "flying electors" moving into a constituency or ward at short notice to sway an election in a marginal seat.

They will be entitled to vote in today's county council elections. But, after the judgment, they said they would spoil their ballot papers.

The Court of Appeal judges made it clear, however, that if the women had been ordered by court injunctions not to camp on any of the land outside the Greenham Common air base, their right to be put on the register would have been lost.

Sir JOHN DONALDSON who was sitting with Lord Justice STEPHEN BROWN and Mr Justice GLIDEWELL, dismissed an appeal by Mr ANTHONY MEYER, chairman of the local residents group, RAGE — Ratepayers Against Greenham Encampments — over a county court ruling that the women — Sarah Hipperson, Rebecca Johnson, Caroline Griffiths, Naomi Griffiths, Sarah Green, Jane Dennett and Katrina Howse — could vote.

Lawyers for Mr Meyer, who was ordered to pay the costs of the appeal had argued that the women were ineligible because they had not established that they were resident in the Greenham area, and that in any case their residence in makeshift accommodation outside the base was unlawful.

Franchise throwback

But Sir John said that to take the standard of accommodation into consideration would be to "put the clock back to the days when the franchise depended upon a property qualification."

It was quite unwarranted under the terms of the 1983 Representation of the People Act, which defined the right to vote in the United Kingdom.

"It may be unusual to make one's home in a tent, 'bender' or vehicle, but we can see no reason in law why it should be impossible," said Sir John.

The "Greenham Ladies," as they were described by the Appeal Court judges, had shown that their residence was sufficiently permanent to qualify them for registration.

The judges went on to dismiss claims by Mr Meyer that because the women were living on common land or land owned by the Department of Transport they were committing criminal offences that disqualified them for registration.

SECRETS IN RUBBISH

Daily Telegraph Reporter

THE Ministry of Defence has begun an investigation into how classified documents were found among rubbish by two schoolboys out fishing.

The MoD confirmed yesterday that the documents, including a Service manual for the Tornado jet fighter, were marked "Nato restricted" but a spokesman said this was the lowest secrecy rating.

The papers, which were found by Lee-Roy Amis, 12, and his friend Stephen Henderson, 15, in a waste paper merchants' rubbish skip at Charlton, London, were handed to ministry investigators.

Mr Tam Dalyell, Labour M P for Linlithgow, tabled a private notice question to Mr Heseltine, Defence Secretary, on how the documents were mislaid.

Ministry presents The Plain Man's Guide to 'the best way to a safer world'

DEFENCE BUDGET GOES UP BY OVER £1,000m

By Maj.-Gen. EDWARD FURSDON
Defence Correspondent

YESTERDAY'S Defence White Paper was primarily an excellent educative document or "The Plain Man's Guide" to what is happening to Britain's defence today. It says little about what may happen tomorrow.

Containing nothing new, it nevertheless condensed into one booklet a remarkable wealth of current defence information which should be required reading not only for most ranks of the Armed Forces worldwide, but also for the public interested in defence, especially those who know nothing about it and wish to learn.

The White Paper says that the Soviet Union's ideological goals, dedicated to the ultimate victory of communism, "will be pursued with caution and discretion, but opportunities will be grasped if the price is limited and acceptable."

Any immediate Soviet intention to attack is discounted.

But the dominant size, improved quality, capability and reach of the Soviet forces need adequate counter-balance

Arms Control and Disarmament, "the best way to a safer world," are covered in considerable historical detail.

Of the American Strategic Defence Initiative, the White Paper says, "It is important that the West should not be left behind."

Britain's 1985/86 Defence Budget is £18,000 million. This is an increase of about three per cent. over 1984/85 and the highest in absolute terms and per capita of any other Nato ally except the United States.

The four pillars of United Kingdom defence policy will continue unchanged.

First, the maintenance of the independent strategic nuclear deterrent through the Trident Submarine D5 missile programme.

Second, the defence of the United Kingdom as the homeland, and as a Nato forward and support base.

Third, the commitment of ground and air forces to Nato in the Central Region of Europe, plus amphibious reinforcement forces for the Northern Region.

Fourth, Royal Navy and RAF maritime forces for the Eastern Atlantic and Channel areas of the Nato region.

On policy beyond the Nato area, "it is in both our own interest and the interest of the West generally that Britain retains defence facilities in strategic locations such as Cyprus, Ascension Island and Diego Garcia: that we commit naval forces to areas such as the Arabian Sea and the Caribbean: and that we maintain a worldwide programme of military deployments and exercises."

But there may be some reduction possible in the Falkland Islands garrison once the new airfield and its associated new recommendation facilities are completed.

Long overdue recognition of the provision of British military assistance overseas has at last been included. Such investment produces an enormously high dividend for Britain for a minimal outlay of resources.

The aim is "to help friendly states to develop self-sufficient, disciplined forces able to maintain national security and contribute to the wider development of their countries."

More than 1,000 servicemen are now involved either on loan service to some 30 countries or undertaking the training in Britain of Commonwealth and foreign students from 70 non-Nato countries.

Few jarring notes

The White Paper contains few jarring notes, but one is important to highlight. The Defence Ministry is concerned that if the decline in the overall size of Britain's merchant fleet continues at its present rate, "it could become increasingly difficult for us to discharge at least some of our Nato obligations.

"The Department of Transport, in conjunction with the Defence Ministry, has therefore commissioned consultants to undertake a major study into the future trends of availability in those parts of the merchant fleet for which there is a defence need."

The recommendations are expected by the middle of this summer.

This year's £18,000 million Defence budget represents a cash increase over 1984/85 of more than £1,000 million, producing an annual growth in the region of three per cent. It breaks down into:

Equipment 46 per cent. (80 per cent. of this figure is to be spent in the United Kingdom, 15 per cent. collaboratively, and five per cent. straight overseas);

Pay and Allowances 19 per cent.;

Works and miscellaneous stores and services 19 per cent.;

Civilian pay 11 per cent.; and Forces pensions five per cent.

The equipment share of some £9,100 million is divided into Air Forces' equipment 39 per cent.; Naval forces' equipment 27 per cent.; Land forces' equipment 20 per cent.; General support 10 per cent. and Research four per cent.

Actual unit costs range from £14·2 million for a Harrier GR3 aircraft to £20 for a pair of combat high boots.

The latest estimated figure for the Trident D5 programme is shown as just under £9,500 million "of which we expect about 55 per cent to be spent in this country."

The impact of Mr Heseltine's policy of competition in equipment procurement is heavily emphasised. For example it resulted in a £60 million saving over estimate in the competition for the new R A F trainer aircraft recently won by Shorts with their Tucano aircraft.

The cost of the Royal Navy's new Sonar 2050 system was actually less in real terms than the old system it is replacing.

The Army has recently completed its Exercise "Lean Look," a study in which it identified 4,000 posts in the support and training establishments which are now being reallocated to front line units posts.

The result is that the Army has found enough manpower "from itself" to raise a new twelfth armoured regiment and a new Close Air Defence Regiment, plus other vital enhancement mannings of engineer and communications equipment.

In the field of civilian manpower, the target figure for a reduction in the Defence Ministrys' strength down to 174,700 by 1 April 1986 has been achieved a year ahead of target.

Heseltine pledges to maintain Navy's surface fleet

By DESMOND WETTERN Naval Correspondent

A FIRM commitment to maintaining a force of 50 destroyers and frigates in commission for the foreseeable future was given yesterday by Mr Heseltine in introducing the 1985-86 Defence Estimates.

The Defence Secretary's pledge ends considerable speculation in the past few weeks that the Navy's surface fleet faced new cuts because of mounting defence costs.

To maintain this force it will be necessary, he conceded, to order new Type 23 frigates in some numbers.

Tenders are to be sought from shipbuilders for the construction of a further three "in the next few days," he said.

The current cost of a Type 23 frigate is £110 million.

Earlier this year Mr Heseltine told Parliament only that he intended to order one and to invite tenders for a second.

Merchant shipping decline

But despite what is obviously good news for the shipbuilding and naval equipment industries the White Paper presents a depressing picture of the decline of British merchant shipping.

The number of merchant ships required for defence purposes is "sufficient in each category to meet our defence needs," the White Paper states, but it adds that "if the decline continues for several more years at the present rate, it could become increasingly difficult for us to discharge at least some of our Nato obligations."

Between 1980 and 1984 the number of tankers that would be required for defence purposes remaining on the British registry dropped from 118 to 78; for general cargo ships from 310 to 150; for container ships from 74 to 58; for passenger ships and ferries from 170 to 145 and for deepsea trawlers from 37 to 16.

Significantly, no mention is made of the decline in numbers of ships needed to sustain the economy and civilian population, where the fall has been even more marked.

But it is admitted that the "demise of the United Kingdom's distant water fishing fleet has caused a shortfall in the number of trawlers suitable for mine countermeasures purposes (as minesweepers).

Studies are in hand to find other ways of overcoming this shortfall.

It is understood that more commercial designed minesweepers comparable to the 12 now in service or building for the Royal Naval Reserve may be ordered at a cost of around £3·5 million each, a "bargain" in terms of warship costs today.

The White Paper says that the Defence Ministry in conjunction with the Department of Transport has commissioned consultants to make a "major study" of trends in those parts of the merchant fleet "for which there is a defence need."

Despite abandonment of the plan of his predecessor, Sir John Nott, to cut the Navy's surface fleet to around 42 destroyers and frigates and to mothball at least eight such ships, Mr Heseltine shows no sign of relenting on the 1981 decision to cut the Navy's manpower by 11,000.

4,000 more fighting men for Army

By Maj.-Gen. EDWARD FURSDON
Defence Correspondent

A REPORT on the Armys Exercise "Lean Look," published yesterday, has identified 4,000 male soldier posts in the support area whose occupants can be transferred to front-line fighting units.

In particular, this scale of savings will now permit the manning of a new armoured and a new air defence regiment to be raised for B A O R.

The Exercise was initiated to see how the Army's future operational capability could be enhanced within its planned long term strength of 137,000 trained male soldiers as from 1987.

In general, the savings in uniformed support posts have been achieved by consideration of six techniques. These are:

The putting of certain tasks out to private civilian contract;

Substituting Defence Ministry civilians for soldiers in approprate jobs;

An increased use of Servicewomen;

Rationalisation and reorganisation;

The exploitation of labour-saving technology; and

Reducing the Army's "Supernumerary Allowance," which is an extra pool of manpower held to cover non-effective absence of men from units, for example on long training courses or terminal leave.

A number of important changes will result from application of these measures. Civilian contracts will be let for static unit non-operational transport tasks such as the management, driving and maintenance of staff cars, vans, mini-buses, coaches and lorries.

Catering contracts will be extended to a further 29 Army establishments in Britain, making a total of 55.

Where possible, civilian contractors will enter the administrative side of the Royal Army Ordnance Corps Central Depots of Stores—for example in certain quartermaster, clerical and printing duties.

They will also not only repair and maintain the Army's railway rolling stock in mainland depots, but also the specialised and complex range instrumentation installed at the Royal Artillery Range in the Outer Hebrides.

Provision of security, catering and messing facilities at the Army Centre for Mounting Overseas Operations at South Cerney, Wiltshire, and the technical manning of the Army's dental prosthetic services, too, are listed for civilian contracting.

Straight replacement of military personnel by MoD-employed civilians is planned for two particular areas.

The first is the provision of chaplains for non-operational units: the second is in the pay teams of static units.

In some 200-300 posts, mainly in the clerical, communications and movement control areas, Servicewomen will take over from Servicemen—thus also giving the former wider interest and career prospects.

The Army's resultant operational manpower enhancements from "Lean Look" lie principally in the ability to raise a 12th Armoured Regiment and a new close Air Defence Regiment, both for B A O R.

Manpower overstretch problem for the RAF

By Air Commodore G. S. COOPER Air Correspondent

THE Defence Ministry's drive for more output for a given cash input is presenting the R A F with a wing-clipping problem of how to run a larger front-line with no increase in manpower.

Air systems (£3,506 million) get the largest share of defence equipment spending again this year, compared with sea (£2,451 million) and land systems (£1,847 million), but the manning strength of the R A F is being held at 93,360 for the third year running.

An extra 7,000 men could be usefully employed to cope with the 15 per cent. growth in the R A F's front-line, which involves an extra six major units.

The Services are not paid for overtime. The R A F is worried that "overstretch" will cause many good technicians to seek better-paid jobs with industry. Firms expanding after the recession are keen to have them.

Statistics for the outflow of Service personnel published in the White Paper already show a 41 per cent. upturn in the number applying for premature release.

Last year 148 pilots applied to go, compared with 100 the year before. After a long freeze on pilot training for commercial aircraft, the airlines are again looking for crews.

A source of discontent for the military is that pilots are being starved of flying again this year to save money for the equipment programme. One 10-hour sortie now consumes a week's flying ration for a Nimrod crew, and fast jet pilots needing 20 hours' flying a month are being rationed to about 15.

The need to cut back on operational training is not appreciated by crews who can see in the White Paper that while £8,300 million was added to the Defence Budget between 1978 and 1983, in the same period £17,900 million was added to Social Security benefits.

TEBBIT WARNING FOR JAPAN ON TRADE TACTICS

By PETER PRYKE Parliamentary Correspondent

JAPANESE undertakings to act to reduce their trade surplus had to be honoured if retaliatory action was to be avoided, Mr TEBBIT, Trade and Industry Secretary, declared in the Commons yesterday.

MPs were particularly incensed by the loss to a Japanese firm of a bridge building contract in Turkey which would have been worth £700 million to a Darlington company.

Mr Tebbit said Japanese tactics in this case, and the subsidies offered, clashed with the undertakings given to him during his recent visit to Japan.

"Unless the surplus is abated, and their markets are opened, and they desist from some of these trading practices, protectionist forces will be impossible to resist."

He had been asked by Mr BOWEN WELLS (C, Hertford and Stortford) what representations he had made to the Japanese on their "predatory and disgraceful dumping price in relation to the Bosphorous bridge."

Associated roadworks

Mr TEBBIT replied that while in Japan he had not been aware of the scale of subsidy offered by the Japanese contractors

The bid of the British company and the scale of aid offered by the British Government had been highly competitive, with the Japanese. But the same had not been true of the pricing and scale of aid offered on the associated roadworks.

The Japanese government had not broken the rules, but, he added, "it does seem to me that the Japanese tactics in this case, and the subsidy, were scarcely compatible with their avowed aim of reducing their trade surplus."

Mr RICHARD HICKMET (C, Glanford) demanded to know what the Minister would do about the disgraceful "dumping of credit" by the Japanese, leading to the hijacking of British industry. Bridge building in Darlington would be eliminated as a result of this case.

'Great difference'

Mr TEBBIT said he agreed that the action of the Japanese government in offering cheap credit and subsidy on this scale was "foolish indeed." It would be brought clearly to their attention that this was not compatible with the programme they had announced for reducing their trade surplus.

Mr JOHN SMITH, Shadow Trade Secretary, said there was a great difference between Japanese professions and Japanese actions. "Will you tell us precisely what undertakings, if any, you got from them about any change in their policies?"

Mr TEBBIT said he had been given undertakings that the Japanese would pursue "with vigour" policies of opening and liberalising their markets.

In particular, there had been an undertaking to seek further to reduce non-tariff barriers. There had been a great deal of discussion, though no guarantees had been given, concerning liberalisation of Japanese financial markets.

"I believe that liberalisation will occur, though too slowly for my liking."

MPs CALL TO SACK 'NAZI' REJECTED

By Our Parliamentary Staff

THE Government's refusal to sack a civil servant alleged to be a Nazi was defended by Mr Norman Tebbit, Trade and Industry Secretary, in the Commons yesterday.

He was replying to the demands of Labour MPs that Mr Denis Pirie, an employee of the Trade and Industry Department, should be dismissed, claiming that he had been involved in plans to set up a new extreme Right-wing group.

Mr TEBBIT said there were no grounds for disciplinary action, as the official concerned had not participated publicly in political action.

He went on to infuriate Labour MPs by apparently linking Fascists with extreme Left-wingers.

"I find the views of extreme Socialists, whether national Socialists or any other kind, extremely displeasing," he said. "That is not a reason for dismissing a person who holds such views."

'Disgusting man'

Mr DAVID WINNICK (Lab., Walsall N) shouted: "You disgusting man. You poison the House of Commons," and Mr ERIC HEFFER (Lab., Walton) demanded an apology.

Thousands of democratic Socialists had joined the forces at the age of 19, as he himself had, and had laid down their lives in the struggle against Fascism, Mr Heffer said.

Mr TEBBIT replied that he had expressed his distaste for extremist Socialist views: "I am happy to add anti-democratic, extremist Socialist views of any kind, whether national Socialist or other version of Socialism."

Explaining the guidelines on the political views and activities of civil servants, he said there was the question of whether he or she might or might not be subversive — a potential traitor.

A broader consideration was that whatever political views an official might hold he was, within the limits of certain ranks of the Civil Service, debarred from active participation in national politics or intervening publicly in matters of national partisan controversy.

Hotel meeting

"This gentleman fell into neither of these categories."

Mr JOHN SMITH, Shadow Trade and Industry Secretary, asked if the Government was saying seriously that provided political activity was not in public it was permitted.

He referred to a report that the official concerned had attended a meeting at a London hotel earlier this year regarding the formation of a new Right-wing organisation.

Mr TEBBIT said there was nothing to prevent an official from holding his views, or going to a meeting to listen to those who had similar views, or discussing his views in private.

BUY BRITISH PLEA TO MOTORISTS

A plea for motorists to return to the habit of buying British cars was made by Mr JOHN BUTCHER, Trade and Industry Under-Secretary, at Commons Question Time yesterday.

He urged all motorists with foreign cars to "look again at the better model range and increasing quality of the range of models coming forward from British manufacturers."

Taxpayers so far get back £6m of the £77m loss on De Lorean

By WILLIAM WEEKES Parliamentary Staff

SOME £6 million of the £77 million of taxpayers' money devoted to the De Lorean car project in West Belfast had so far been recouped, Dr RHODES BOYSON, Northern Ireland Minister, told the Commons yesterday.

He also said the site at Dunmurry where the De Lorean factory was built, worth £1,800,000 had also been returned.

Although Dr Boyson did not elaborate, the money recovered is understood to come mainly from the sale of various assets, including cars completed before the venture collapsed.

The Minister promised that the Government would leave no stone unturned in getting back "in every way" the money that "went walkabout" in the De Lorean venture.

He was speaking during a debate on the highly critical report of the all-party Committee of Public Accounts which investigated the project and concluded that it "represents one of the gravest cases of the misuse of public resources to come before us for many years."

Lost money

The evidence disclosed a "shocking misappropriation" of public and private money, the report said.

It also showed that Mr De Lorean's companies received about £77 million of taxpayers' money and lost most of it within four years.

Dr Boyson assured MPs that all the major recommendations made by the committee had been incorporated into the procedures for handling industrial development projects in Northern Ireland.

During the Minister's speech, Mr NICHOLAS WINTERTON (C., Macclesfield) intervened to complain that Dr Boyson was seeking to make excuses for the lack of adequate inquiries about Mr De Lorean's pedigree.

Lax handling

Mr DON CONCANNON (Lab., Mansfield) a Northern Ireland Minister in the Labour Government when agreement to the project was given in 1978, said he could not understand the myth that De Lorean's background had not been investigated.

"I spent a considerable time going into De Lorean's background," he said.

A vigorous defence of his decision, as Northern Ireland Secretary, to approve the project was mounted by Mr ROY MASON (Lab., Barnsley Central), who argued that it could have been saved had the present Government not been so lax in its handling of the affair.

Although he welcomed the committee's report, Mr Mason said it was an exaggeration to use such words as "gravest misuse of public resources". Governments over the years had had much worse examples than that.

Detailing the events leading to his decision, he said there had not been the slightest suggestion from any source that the De Lorean team was suspect either as it stood or in the track record of its members.

Mr WINTERTON: Government dishonest, duplicitous and incompetent.

Mr Mason said only £17,700,000 had been given to the venture by the time he left office in April, 1979, the vast bulk of the cash being given to De Lorean by the present Government.

"I believe the De Lorean motor car could have been saved," Mr Mason said. "The Conservative administration was lax in its handling of this affair.

"I say to all those officials at that exacting and exciting time—it was worth doing and it was worth fighting for, and they need have no sense of shame."

Mr Mason said he was convinced that cars would still be being made in West Belfast had the Labour Government stayed in office because Ministers' keen interest in the project would have allowed the political will to succeed.

'Gravest cases'

Earlier, opening the debate, Mr ROBERT SHELDON, former Labour Treasury Minister and chairman of the committee which conducted the inquiry, stressed the strength of its findings.

"We called it one of the gravest cases of the misuse of public resources to come before us for many years. We called it a shocking misappropriation of public and private money."

The committee had concluded there was "misplaced optimism by Government and its advisers," he said.

Mr De Lorean had set Northern Ireland officials a 15-day deadline to agree to the go-ahead for the project.

When Governments were considering high risk ventures "they must insist on an adequate period in which to carry out a full detailed assessment of the viability of the potential project," said Mr Sheldon.

'Manifest shark'

But Mr ENOCH POWELL (O U P, Down, S.) submitted that a "major error of judgment" was made at the inception of the project. Ministers, civil servants and Cabinets entertained a proposition which was, on the face of it, "positively hair-raising.

"That was to enter into an agreement which gave the authority and the money into the hands of someone who was committing nothing to it.

"They were confronted with a personality who, to the most ordinary psychologist, would have been recognised as the most manifest shark.

"Those of us who watched these events at the time could scarcely believe our ears when we heard the terms of the agreement and contemplated the individual, and the boasts of the individual, with whom the agreement had been made."

The decision to back De Lorean was for public consumption, to enhance the Government's image, ignoring the almost unimaginable risks, Mr Powell said

The affair was a political misjudgment based on the idea that investment in certain areas of Northern Ireland could somehow draw the teeth of the terrorists.

Failed to act

Mr WINTERTON condemned Mr Mason for trying to "unload the entire blame" for the De Lorean affair on the Conservative Government.

But he was equally critical of Conservative Ministers who had failed to act when confronted with evidence of financial abuse which he had collected.

"I say this with some regret, that my Government, when I gave them ample evidence of the abuse and misuse of public funds, refused to act," he said.

Mr Winterton, who said he had had an interview with Mrs Thatcher and Sir Michael Havers, Attorney General, to present his evidence, accused Mr De Lorean of spending taxpayers money "like confetti."

"It is sad that I have to indict Government in this country with dishonesty. I have to indict it with duplicity and I have to indict individual Ministers with incompetence," he said.

Sort of Dalek

Mr Winterton said that at the interview Mrs Thatcher clearly knew very little about the matter.

"When I put questions . . . to the Prime Minister, all of them were referred by her to the Attorney General who replied as if he were some sort of Dalek.

Mr Winterton was bitterly critical of the Government for not coming to his aid when he faced a £133 million law suit over his accusation against Mr De Lorean.

Mr De Lorean's suit against the Macclesfield MP was "struck off" by a British judge and Mr Winterton himself was awarded £15,000 damages against the car magnate. But he said he had not received a penny of this because of Mr De Loreans "technical insolvency."

He said that if Mr De Lorean "ever steps on the shores of the United Kingdom he will have a writ slapped on him for the money which he owes me."

Stringent rules

Mr STUART BELL, from the Opposition Front Bench, said Governments had shown their both Labour and Conservative commitment to the people of Northern Ireland by backing the project.

"The lessons are that while stringent rules and regulations can and must apply where public money is concerned, everything must be done to prevent the likes of Mr De Lorean from slipping through that net again.

"Not only did he deprive the taxpayer of his money, but he raised the expectations of ordinary people in Northern Ireland and then dashed them to the ground."

Labour fears over BAe shares rejected

By Our Parliamentary Staff

LABOUR claims that the Government's decision to sell its remaining shareholding in British Aerospace endangered the national interest were rejected by Mr GEOFFREY PATTIE, Defence Procurement Minister, in the Commons yesterday.

British Aerospace had demonstrated its ability to operate profitably in the private sector and he was sure the company would welcome the sale, he said.

Special arrangement

Dismissing Labour complaints that the company played too important a part in Britain's defence to be wholly privatised, he said that it was not dependent on the Government for its success.

The "special share" arrangement, vested in the Industry secretary, would safeguard the national interest.

Mr JOHN SMITH, Shadow Industry Secretary, said the main reason for the sale was the Treasury's need to raise money and had nothing to do with greater efficiency.

He asked for an assurance that Kleinwort Benson, the bankers, would not on this occasion permit their employees to buy shares, as had happened in the privatisation sale of British Telecom.

Mr PATTIE replied that Kleinwort Benson were advising British Aerospace on this occasion.

The Government were being advised by Lazard Brothers, who had indicated that staff directly involved in this exercise would not be allowed to participate.

EQUALITY 'HAS LONG WAY TO GO'

By WALTER ABURN Parliamentary Staff

THERE was still a long way to go before women were equally represented in public life and in our economic and social institutions, Lord Glenarthur, Home Office Under-Secretary, acknowledged in the Lords yesterday.

Responding to a debate in which Baroness LOCKWOOD (Lab) noted progress towards sex equality and equal pay, but "also some retrograde steps," Lord GLENARTHUR reaffirmed the Government's commitment to equay pay for all and the creation of a society where every individual could play a full part.

Lady LOCKWOOD, first chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission, noted the growing percentage of women in the labour market. They held 45 per cent. of the jobs she said.

But their average earnings were only 30 per cent. of those for men and they were preponderantly in low-pay occupations. In professions like teaching, their average salaries were £700 less than those of male counterparts.

'Vulnerable' workers

Those returning to work after bearing children frequently took part-time, non-unionised, low-paid jobs which put them among the most vulnerable workers in the country, as the Government should note when considering the fate of Wages Councils.

Pressure to bring down wages affected women most, while their significant economic contribution to both family and nation was not fully recognised under the social security system or in the labour market.

Baroness GARDNER of PARKES (C.), a United Kingdom representative of the United Nations' Status of Women's Commission, stressed hat whatever women's problems might be in Britain, they were as nothing compared with those of women in the developing countries.

She urged early British ratification of a UN convention to eliminae all forms of discrimination against women.

Career prospects

Baroness SEEAR, Liberal in the Lords, said that while direct discrimination was rare, Britain was riddled with indirect discrimination.

Invariably, it was a woman who had to take time off work to care for a child or invalid. It was these interruptions which interfered with her career prospects.

Baroness RUBSON (Lib.) regretted that there had not been a woman health authority chairman since she and Baroness Warnock retired from jobs to which Sir Keith Joseph appointed them.

Family cares and responsibilities were preventing too many women from taking part in public life in the absence of support which community services should be giving them.

Working women

Baroness EWART-BIGGS (Lab.) said in years to come it would seem a paradox that the first government in Britain led by a woman had continued the undermining of women's opportunities.

At no point did this government's record display enough sympathy for Mrs Thatcher's peers "who, like her, happen to be working women."

Baroness PLATT of WRITTLE (C.), chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission, pointed to the importance of the contribution made to family incomes by working wives. Many would be o supplemetary benefit without it.

Lord WEDDERBURN of CHARLTON (Lab) said badly-paid non-unionised women workers were the first victims of the Government's unsociable drive for lower wages. Unless we promoted equality now it would damage not only women but men, children and the nation's future.

Project & Design Engineering

c.£18,000 + car

"Senior engineers & managers for engineering projects"

There can be no doubt that my client has emerged in recent years as one of the prime sources of expertise in the design and application of large scale combustion and boiler technologies. With a string of prestigious projects to their credit, they have the market confidence, intellectual capital, and significantly, access to the substantial financial resources of an international parent group, which together forms the basis of a major programme of growth and diversification.

Therefore, with business trends set fair to achieve a 3-fold expansion in turnover over the next 2 years, our search is for a number of professionally mature engineers. Individuals whose broad technical knowledge is enhanced by the confident way in which they take on the mantle of leadership as a key decision maker within the management team.

Our perception of the ideal candidates would suggest that you have already accrued considerable experience of the practical aspects of engineering management within the context of large industrial projects in the process industries. Ideally, this experience will have familiarised you with the problems of leading design teams, planning practical development budgets and schedules, and the necessary technical support for site operations.

On a more detailed level, we are particularly eager to meet engineers whose background falls into the following areas:

Process Engineering:- particularly if you have boiler industry/petrochem experience which has furnished you with an understanding of combustion/power systems.

Mechanical Engineering:- boiler designers with a knowledge of industrial applications.

Electrical Engineering:- To lead the design and specification of steam raising plant and ancillary equipment for private power generation schemes.

Instrumentation Engineering:- Electrical and Electronic instrumentation for industrial systems.

The seniority of these positions makes it unlikely that anyone under the age of 35 will have the depth or Engineering skills or man-management expertise necessary. It is likely applicants will be graduates and/or have Chartered Engineering status. In addition to excellent prospects for progression within a growing management structure, my client offers competitive company benefits together with a generous relocation package where appropriate.

To discuss any of these roles in greater detail, call me Keith Elms on (0992) 552552 until 7.00 pm TONIGHT or during normal hours. Alternatively forward your CV to me quoting reference MD 316 at: Macmillan Davies Energy, The Old Vaults, Parliament Square, Hertford SG14 1PU.

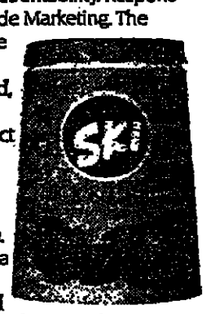
Our products are best-sellers. Our expansion plans are on target. If you're an ambitious Marketing professional, this is your chance to be part of our success.

We can offer you: Accountability. Responsibility. Autonomy – in Trade Marketing. The chance to deal with some of the biggest names in the grocery business. And, of course, the rewards and prospects you'd expect from a company that's committed to success.



Naturally, our standards are high – but then, trade marketing is hardly a soft option. Rather, it's a challenging, dynamic and competitive environment where results count.

If you're ready for the most important move of your career, take a look at the brief job outlines below. They'll give you an idea of how we're strengthening our Trade Marketing team – and where you'd fit in.

Trade Marketing Group Manager

For you, marketing's not so much a career as a way of life. You're talented, experienced, already operating at senior level in a consumer marketing environment – and more than ready to take on the challenge of this crucial role. You will report to the Sales Director and head a group responsible for the profitable management of our business through a number of £multi-million customers. We expect you to have a sound analytical background, good man-management

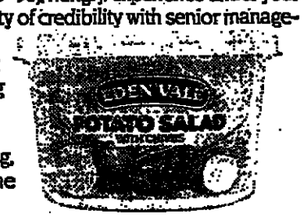
Young (25-30), hungry, experience under your belt and plenty of credibility with senior management? Then take a look at the preceding job outline – that's where you're heading, if you make the grade in successfully managing one of our £multi-million customers.



A good analytical background (perhaps gained in an agency) will stand you in good stead, as will an imaginative, creative approach to problem solving: if this is supported by sales experience, so much the better, but we'll provide training where necessary. The role will extend you – the salary/benefits package will be a match.

HYDRAULIC SYSTEMS

Senior Design Engineers c£16,000

This rapidly expanding high technology company is a market leader in the design and manufacture of capital equipment for offshore applications. It is part of a British engineering group and its two hundred employees work in an unspoilt rural area within 25 miles of the coast and a major city. Turnover more than doubled last year. The company's products are unique and exciting, being designed to minimum weight for use in uncompromising environments.

You will generate new designs required by major projects and reduce the costs of previous systems designs. You will also take an active part in establishing new production procedures and improving those which currently exist. You will control a team of up to five mainly graduate engineers and support staff which will vary depending on the project being undertaken.

This is no desk-bound R & D job. You need practical engineering skills to enable you to specify and cost solutions to problems which are subject to commercial pressures. Thus formal qualifications are less important than practical design experience; nevertheless, an HNC (Mech) would be regarded as a minimum requirement and knowledge of servo control systems and/or microprocessor-controlled design (including computer modelling/CAE) would be an advantage.

Please write giving full career details to me, Geoffrey Hunt, Consultant to the Company. Your name will not be released until we have briefed you and you have given your consent.

THEATRE / Follies

The good old times revisited

A SHOW of legendary complexity and expense, Broadway's "Follies" of 1971 is receiving its European professional premiere at the remarkable Forum Wythenshawe, in a full-scale production which does credit to Manchester's Library Theatre, the presenters.

Although shorn of Michael Bennett's original choreography and Harold Prince's elaborate staging, the musical glories in a score and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim and these are as witty and tuneful as any he has written.

And as thoughtful and bitter. Written in the same year as Pinter's nostalgic "Old Times" (Haymarket). "Follies" is also about old times, and also has the ghosts of the characters when young appearing beside their present selves to mix memory with desire and stir dull roots with spring rain.

It centres on a sad-happy reunion party held in a plush New York theatre where once the Ziegfeld Follies kind of show was staged. Bulldozers will shortly demolish it. Time, that other bulldozer, has been at work for 25 years on the marriages of two former chorus girls—Phyllis, who married wealthily, and Sally, the bleached dollybird who always loved Phyllis's husband and now, if only for a drunken moment, wins him back.

Recollecting all our yesterdays with joy Sondheim festoons the piece with funny but loving parodies of '20s, '30s and '40s songs—"Broadway Bay," "Ah! Paris," and the cod-Viennese "One More Kiss." He also supplies a gritty solo for an indomitable survivor in "I'm Still Here," and a haunting duet for two youngsters awaiting their sweethearts, "The Girl Upstairs."

Cleverer still, he has the two wives and husbands face their past and present follies in songs which expose a sentimentalist's daydreams, or a careerist's self-hatred, or a philanderer's futile quest for the "right girl"—and dovetails them into a stunning re-creation of an old-style top-hat-and-tails revue, flaunting mannequins and staircase-loads of dancers.

At its worst, James Goldman's book tosses faded nosegays to dear dead days beyond recall. But it often inspires Sondheim to near-Proustian insights into the impulses and delusions of youth, and maturity's heart-breaking view of what was and what might have been as the adult couples eavesdrop on the vows and courtship rituals of their young selves.

With Mary Millar, Josephine Lake, Kevin Colson and Bill Bradley as the principals, and Meg Johnson and Jeannie Harris safely in charge of two show-stopping numbers, Howard Lloyd-Lewis's production offers a vastly enjoyable account of a musical of pioneering intelligence in its field which London should have seen long ago.

John Barber

A convincingly wicked Richard III

IT WAS the crutches at Stratford-upon-Avon last year which made Bill Alexander's "Richard III" so astonishing, and it is the crutches again of course, now that this Royal Shakespeare production reaches the Barbican. But since their novelty as an artistic support for the actor Antony Sher to grab attention is no longer as novel as it was, the question whether he needs them becomes more interesting than ever.

Would this Richard not be just as startling in his energetic evil and crippled exuberance if he could carry on in the first half as he carries on for most of the second—that is merely with a hump and a limp? Mr Sher seems more expressive without the crutches, for although they give him such diverting opportunities to hop, skip and jump about the stage, to prod the prophetic Margaret between the legs or apply them like scissors to Hastings' threatened neck, they are essentially too diverting as we wonder what on earth he will do with them next—cartwheels, perhaps?

Their upstaging power is terrific but when did Richard ever allow anybody to upstage him?

Mr Sher may not have Olivier's voice or mesmerising presence but his physical vitality and those dark cavernous eyes, with a snarling nose and sweaty forehead, create as convincingly wicked-seeming a figure as any since Olivier's.

All one missed is the ability to convince us that he could charm his underlings or even deceive them. He may be justly proud of his "naked villainy" but what about his promise to "seem a saint?" It is when he crawls to the throne in his red robes, having shown us his bare, hunched back at the Coronation, that we taste his poisonous nature to the full. And William Dudley's wonderful evocation of a cathedral makes the events the more sickening as they take place in such sanctified conditions.

Only when it occupies Bosworth Field does this ecclesiastical setting become a nuisance. By then, Richard and the play have run their course and we can't help wondering why this play should be made to run nearly as long as "Hamlet."

Not many other players have much of a look-in but Malcolm Storry's Buckingham is a splendid conspirator and political agent for Richard; and Roger Allam's Clarence reminds us how well Shakespeare's verse can be spoken. Elsewhere there are very strange vowel sounds, but nothing is as strange, sardonic and disturbing as this horridest of Richards—with or without those peculiar props.

BALLET / The Sleeping Beauty

IT WAS doubly fitting that the Sadler's Wells Royal Ballet should open its Covent Garden season on Tuesday night with Peter Wright's new production of "The Sleeping Beauty": for this is a large-scale spectacular ballet, ill-suited to the present Sadler's Wells stage, and it is well suited to a fund-raising gala—in this case the development funds of both Sadler's Wells and Covent Garden.

The prologue made a subdued impact—partly because of the fussiness of Philip Prowse's adaptation of his permanent set, and partly because of the lack-lustre dancing of all but one of the fairy soloists. Fortunately Susan Lucas showed musicality and good line in the third solo, and as soon as Galina Samsova came on stage, as the wicked fairy Carabosse, the ballet achieved its proper Franco-Russian splendour. But Peter Wright made a mistake in cutting down the role of Carabosse in Act I: with an artist of such rare quality at his disposal he should have given her all the scope provided by Petipa's mime-choreography.

The magical radiance we might hope for in Princess Aurora is beyond the scope of Marion Tait; but she dances neatly and has both assurance and vivacity. She was at her best in the first half of her solo in Act I (which contains the best of Petipa's choreography) and in the final pas de deux in Act III.

As Prince Florimund, Roland Price did well, looking handsome and showing the appropriate aristocratic grace, both in his solos and when he was partnering Princess Aurora.

David Yow and Sandra Madgwick made a creditable attempt at the very difficult Blue Bird pas de deux; but he used too white a makeup, remained earthbound when he should have soared, and sometimes he failed to point his feet; she, though technically assured, seemed to find difficulty in connecting up her steps.

To hell and back

FORTY YEARS on the familiar horror pictures from Belsen still have a power to shock beyond almost anything most of us have experienced. The time to worry will be when we can look at them without being sickened, or begin to wonder whether it all really happened.

For the group of doctors assembled in last night's Open Space (BBC-2) no such possibility will ever exist. "It was a journey to hell and back, the ultimate in man's inhumanity to man," shuddered one. Another spoke of his reluctance to re-open his journal after four decades or trying to blot out the memories; they had, he said, changed his whole life, made him unwilling even to join a political party, through fear of what organised society might do to men.

The doctors were all medical students in May 1945 when, in response to a call to the London *teaching hospitals, they volun*teered to help combat famine in Holland. Instead they were switched to Belsen, where the death camps had just been discovered. They were all in their young '20s, members of a privileged "reserved" elite: they were about to encounter sights and suffering badly known to modern history.

For three weeks their business was to dispose of the dead, to succour the dying, and to try to save those who could be brought back to some sem*blance of humanity. Often,* amid the squalor of the skeletal corpses and the barely breathing, it was difficult to know which was which.

For the young doctors, victory in Europe was the day when not a single inmate had died the night before. Altogether 35,000 of Belsen's 45,000 inhabitants at the time of liberation were saved, cleaned, and hospitalised. The German nurses and the S S guards who were made to bury the dead died of typhus; a terrible Nemesis.

Victorian England had no Belsens, but it knew social conditions not far removed from those of the concentration camp. Their compassionate chronicler, Charles Dickens, usually managed to bring humour to bear even in his descriptions of the debtors' jails; but Bleak House (B B C-2), at any rate in the B B C version, comes out as more sombre than "Hard Times." Even his ironic onslaught against the outrageous machinery of the law (the B B C must find this a sympathetic theme just now) is more savage than amusing.

What really comes between me and appreciation of Arthur Hopcraft's and Jonathan Powell's adaptation is the unvaryingly misty, moisty look: everything photographed via such a weight of filters that it's like looking through thick dust. Reasonable enough, when we are in the Fleet, or the dark recesses of a London alley; used all the time, this dim religious effect becomes merely cloying. Dickens' drama and the quality of Powell's cast (marvellous Krook from Bernard Hepton, recognisable only from the shape of his nose) don't need this adventitious aid.

Celebrating America

INDIAN AND ESKIMO artists, the most wide ranging group of their kind to visit Britain, will be among American artists and major performing groups taking part in a spectacular festival opening next week.

The American Festival, staged in London, Cardiff and Glasgow, is described as the greatest celebration of American artse and entertainment ever held outside the U.S.A.

The project has been made possible with £500,00 in sponsorship from British and American businesses.

The three centres will house more than 80 different events, representing the work of over 500 artists and entertainers.

The organisers say they hope to challenge many Europeans' rather limited view of the United States and its artistic life and surprise audiences with the sheer range and exhuberance of the work on show.

The North American Indian and Eskimo artists will be seen working at the Museum of Mankind in London from May 14 to June 14 as part of the celebrations. Appropriately enough, the centre of the museum display will be a 25-foot totem pole.

The Festival will include outstanding and familiar names such as the New York Philharmonic, the Merce Cunningham Dance Company, Negro Ensemble Company and Frank Stella, the painter. But the programme will also introduce to Britain a range of highly-talented but lesser known artists.

Diversity will be the key. Music performances will range from those of the Preservation Hall Jazz Band of New Orleans to avant-garde electro-acoustic work.

MUSIC / RPO, Rowicki LSO, Davis

THE ROYAL Philharmonic Orchestra was joined at the Festival Hall on Tuesday night by the senior Polish conductor Witold Rowicki and by the distinguished Hungarian pianist Annie Fischer, in an account of Beethoven's first piano concerto that was an enthralling model of what, for want of a better term, could be described as the now rapidly disappearing old style.

The spirit had already been established in Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture in which, guided by the conductor with the minimum of self-effacing gesture, the music seemed almost to play itself with a naturally precise and succinctly infectious operatic zest.

And this same intuitive quality was immediately carried over into the concerto; the spontaneous authenticity of its purely musical values gathering a rich and long tradition into the refreshingly uninhibited moment of performance.

For about the first third of its first movement there were for even Miss Fischer's most ardent admirers some hair-raising passages of nervously uncontrolled notes and decorative figurations. But even these were suffused with a rare intensity and inner life, and once she had acquired her self-command her playing through the rest of the movement, through the largo and finale, never faltered in its instinctively expressive eloquence.

While in the subtle confidence of its finely moulded phrasing, drawing on her long experience of performing a work in which she made her Budapest debut as a child prodigy what must be more than half a century ago, it yet possessed that inexplicable freshness of something being discovered as if for the first time.

The same feeling of something being recreated anew also pervaded Rowicki's often quite daringly original view of Stravinsky's "Petroushka," its music presented with the clean, direct lines and bright, graphic colours of folk art, yet achieved *by the most unaffectedly disci*plined and sophisticated of means.

Robert Henderson

IT WAS a night of old associations at the Barbican on Tuesday night. Indeed, we might have been back at a concert of 15 years ago. Here was Colin Davis, conducting Berlioz with the L S O and partnering Stephen Bishop-Kovacevich in a Beethoven Concerto.

Happily, during the intervening period, Sir Colin has lost none of his enthusiasm for or authority in, the Symphonie Fantastique. Here was all the former ardour in projecting this extraordinary (for 1830 or indeed any time) work. He managed to give us both the essence of its romantic spirit while remaining aware of its musical form. He was able to share in the fevers of the hero's imagination and in his subjective love, without the need for the exaggeration often indulged in by others.

The First and Fourth movements were taken at rather temperate speeds but that only served to emphasise the inner yearning of the one, implac*able terror of the other. The* Dance and Pastoral movements in between were both suitably evocative, the March to the Scaffold as sinister as it should be. All were superlatively played by the L S O in empathy with the work and conductor.

There was also empathy between Davis and his pianist in Beethoven's C major Concerto. Their view of the work was dynamic, almost demonic, rather than lyrical. The huge orchestra and often larger-than-life pianism, emphasised by the awkward acoustics of this hall, was very much of the late 19th century, and the finale's tempo was surely too headlong. But Bishop-Kovacevich offered many of his customary insights, persuading one to view the music in a fresh and often interesting fashion.

WAY OF THE WORLD

Nightmare

A "NATIONWIDE study" of pregnant mothers, reports the OBSERVER, is to be carried out this year to test a new technique for diagnosing "genetic" diseases in unborn children. The technique is called "chorionic villus (cv) sampling" and, it is claimed, enables doctors to detect hereditary diseases in foetuses only eight to 10 weeks old.

Present techniques can detect only a few hereditary diseases, such as Down's Syndrome. The new technique can detect many more. Present kinds of tests such as amniocentesis, says Dr Bernadette Modell, one of the scientists working on CV, "are typically done at about 18 to 20 weeks, when a foetus feels like a little human being to a mother. Aborting at that stage can be extremely harrowing.

"By contrast, our sampling is done when the foetus is less than an inch long. Aborting is then relatively untraumatic."

But the foetus, at any age or size, not merely "feels like a human being to some mothers" but is a human being. This new technique, with its obvious implication that "genetically defective" foetuses should be aborted as a matter of course, is simply another aspect of that scientific control of life and death which, not long ago a nightmare, is fast becoming a reality as various new techniques converge.

Mr Enoch Powell's Unborn Children (Protection) Bill, which will make research on embryos illegal, reaches its Report Stage this week. It is supported by a petition signed by two million people, the largest petition to Parliament for more than 100 years.

The Bill, which accepts in vitro fertilisation for husband and wife under strict licensing and therefore fails to oppose the infamous Warnock Report entirely, does not go far enough. Even the slightest concession to the power of perverted science over life and death is dangerous. Two million people have shown their deep, instinctive, human horror of it. Their voice should be heard.

Wordsworth's Bane

A MAN in Cornwall who picked five daffodils outside a house belonging to the National Trust was arrested, photographed, fingerprinted and taken to a police station, where he was charged with stealing daffodils worth 24p from the National Trust.

He had to appear in court three times for remand before magistrates heard the case and dropped the charges against him. The case cost him £120 in lost earnings and the total cost of the case to taxpayers will be nearly £500.

If five daffodils are worth 24p, how much is one daffodil worth? But this is by the way. Wordsworth must have picked a daffodil or two in his time out of the ten thousand he saw as he wondered lonely as a cloud over what is now National Trust property. What would he have thought about this case of "conservationism" run mad?

He could not foresee that his own love of nature would lead in time to such excesses of bureaucratic lunacy in the cause of "conservation." These particular daffodils were, of course, the property of the National Trust. But there are those who would like to make it illegal to pick wild flowers anywhere.

The odious priggishness of ecolepts, with their humourless exhortations, is enough to make people want to go out and pick all the wild flowers they can find. If they can be conserved only by rules, regulations, penalties and finally inside wired enclosures, it may be better for them to perish altogether, to reappear in some sane, green world of the future where conservation and ecolepsy are unknown.

Atrocity

"ARTIST Andy Johnson hates garden gnomes so much that he has gone into business making dead ones at his workshop in Merthyr, Mid-Glamorgan. His rockery horror show of 2ft gnomes at £24·95 includes ones with hatchets in their heads and garden trowels and forks in their chests" (news item).

Sir Howard Trembath, chairman of the British Garden Gnome Authority, yesterday convened an emergency meeting "on the highest level" to consider what measures should be taken to deal with this atrocity.

"It is the worst threat to British gnomes," he said, "since the Great Massacre of 1962, when thousands of gnomes, designed to be parachuted over Torquay as part of National Gnome Week, landed on the South Yorkshire - Lancashire Moors owing to pilot error in low cloud and were destroyed wholesale by the half-savage inhabitants of that region.

"It is difficult to understand the mentality of a man, particularly one claiming to be an artist, who can behave in this callous manner. There is also a philosophical problem: can these gnomes be described as dead if they have never lived? But I shall deal with that later.

"The British garden gnome is the envy of the civilised world. In his resolute stand for peace and aid for the Third World, he is highly regarded at the Bar of World Opinion, where, indeed, many British gnomes are to be found.

"Garden gnomes are prominent in the councils of the Liberal and Social Democratic parties and are working for a meaningful Alliance. There are already several gnomes in Parliament. In time to come they may well hold the balance of power.

"It is a time for greatness," he added after a pause.

Ingratitude

THE OPEN, manly attitude of Mr Ron Todd, eleceted General Secretary of the Transport and General Workers' Union, in calling for a new ballot to cear the air and restore the good name of the union after suggestions of ballot-rigging has met with nothing but base ingratitude.

In a report to Mr Moss Evans, the retiring General Secretary, who, it seems, agreed only reluctantly to a new ballot on Mr Todd's insistence, Mr John Garnett, described as director of the Industrial Society, cites various irregularities in the original ballot.

For instance, all the ballot papers in one branch, he alleges, had been filled in by the same person and cast for Mr Todd. In another branch five people, he alleges, had filled in the voting forms between them. One branch had returned precisely 800 votes, all cast for Mr Todd except for one spoiled paper.

"The extraordinary thing", he reports, "is that the ballot books are sent out in fifties—it's one chance in 50 that that number should be returned. That everybody should have voted for the same person is one chance in 40,000".

All this nitpicking merely indicates a suspicious nature, as well as a positively cabbalistic obsession with numbers and their supposed significance. It is at variance with the ideals of trade union democracy which Mr Evans and Mr Todd are trying to uphold.

What, after all, is the point of holding a ballot if it does not give the required result? Arithmetical pedantry brings trade union democracy into disrepute. Much more of it and ordinary trade union members will be even less inclined to vote than they are at present.

Tibetan plants show honours botanist

By FRED WHITSEY

THE centenary of the birth of the great botanical collector Frank Kingdon-Ward was celebrated at this week's Westminster Flower Show with an exhibit of the plants he discovered in Tibet and western China.

It was mounted by Wakehurst Place Gardens and ranged from the rain forest rhododendrons to the high alpine species.

On a stand nearby were some plants of the blue Tibetan poppy that Kingdon-Ward rediscovered and helped to bring into cultivation. They came from the Rougham Hall Nurseries, one of the firms which contributed to a show packed with fascinating incidents for garden lovers.

Winner of the principal awards in the rhododendron competition was Mr Edmund de Rothschild whose Exbury gardens on the Solent were some of the few in the South-east to escape last week's devastating frost. Runners-up were Anne, Countess of Rosse, and the National Trust, exhibiting from the Sussex gardens of Nymans.

Spotless plants

Supporting the rhododendron competition was a group of spotless plants from the Keston, Kent, firm of Reuthe and one of evergreen azaleas from Starborough of Edenbridge.

A heavy entry in the final leg of the daffodil competition was supported by a group from Kelway, in which the double White Lion was a distinguished variety and from Amand who was showing the last of the miniature varieties.

W. Blanchard, Blandford, was the winner of the best bloom trophy with a faultless golden short trumpet variety Bubarrow. Rathowen won the only gold medal with daffodils.

A deep cerise near hardy pleione orchid came from Ingwereen, Hazelden, had many pansies each with a name of its own, and Brenda Hyatt had Jack-in-the-green primrose with double flowers bred as a result of 20 years' work by Dr Cecil Jones, a Llanelly amateur.

CLEARING THE AIR . . .

FRICTION between smokers and non-smokers can ruin the atmosphere of an evening. Restaurants and airlines solve the problem by delineating clear "smoking" and "non-smoking" areas.

For the non-smoking hostess confronted with an avalanche of guests puffing tobacco fumes into the upholstery however, the solution is not so simple.

Herbs and fragrances can at least alleviate the solution. The specialist fragrance boutique, Les Senteurs, in Ebury Street, London, S.W.1 has two French products specifically designed to combat "pollution" caused by smokers.

One is a small porcelain lamp which burns fragrant scented oils such as lilac, lavender, myrtle or parma violet. The other is a range of scented pebbles which are sprinkled into the ashtrays to take off the stale smell of cigarette ends and ash. Fortnum and Mason's gift department offers a clean and simple method of extinguishing cigarettes with its gold-plated "snuffers."

These are unobtrusive metal rings which snuff the cigarette out without messy ash. Cigarette smokers can make the habit a little more acceptable to the non-smoking observer by the use of decorative holders, Marlene Dietrich-style, or fancy cigarette cases.

PICTURED (from top-left clockwise): Lampe berger and spring lilac fragrance, £35 and Terre d'ambience scented pebbles, £4·95, both from Les Senteurs, Ebury Street, London, S.W.1; 24ct gold-plated snuffers, £9·95 pair, from Fortnum and Mason, London, W.1; short, bead and diamanté 1950s cigarette holder, £45 from The Purple Shop, and long art deco diamanté holder, £45 from Persiflage, both at Antiquarius, King's Road, London, S.W.3; art deco cigarette case, £46 from Butler and Wilson, Fulham Road, London, S.W.3. # Following the Jolly line on child care

● Child care guru Dr Hugh Jolly: "I don't try to persuade anyone of anything . . . I try to give commonsense advice." Picture by SRDJA DJUKANOVIC.

BY AVRIL GROOM

A GREAT many modern parents have come to rely on Dr Hugh Jolly for advice. His "Book of Child Care," first published in 1975, is regarded as a modern, non-authoritarian Dr Spock, in which the first rule is to state that there are no firm rules and then provide plentiful commonsense advice that gives parents confidence to cope on their own.

But, Dr Jolly is the first to agree, child care is not a static subject and, though many old-fashioned notions from previous generations still hold good, change is so fast that he has found it necessary to revise and update the book four times since its original appearance.

The newest edition is out today (George Allen and Unwin, £12·95) and includes, in a more lavish presentation, colour pictures for the first time, clear sketches, side head*ings up the pages for* quick reference and the whole second section, on the sick child, printed on tinted paper for even quicker identification.

Many of the pictures quite deliberately show men involved with their children and illustrate what has become the plank of many of Dr Jolly's additions to the new version—that child care is a shared activity, not just between both parents but between siblings too, almost returning to the extended family concept of simpler, less sophisticated societies.

Although now semi-retired—he is still Honorary Consultant Paediatrician to London's Charing Cross Hospital—Dr Jolly retains his boundless enthusiasm for his subject.

"I don't know why anyone in the medical profession is anything other than a paediatrician—children are such fun," he said.

Dr Jolly's attitudes have come a long way in his career, he admits. "I cringe at some of the things I did as a young doctor without thinking twice," he said. "I never expected to be present at the birth of my own children, despite the fact that I was doing an obstetric job at the time. I spent hours sitting on the beds of women in labour, talking to them and soothing them and it never occurred to me that this was a role more suited to their husbands."

But he soon set about instituting changes. "I was appalled when I first had a job at Great Ormond Street to find how restricted the visiting hours were at that time and what distress it caused the children when their relatives left. I vowed then that when I had my own unit, which proved to be in Plymouth, I would have totally unrestricted visiting. It took me two days to achieve this when I got there."

He thoroughly enjoyed restructuring the paediatric attitudes of South Devon, but realised after some years that the only way to spread his gospel wider was to work at a London teaching hospital "because teaching medical students the right things is as important a method of progress as any."

Despite the opposition of his young family to living in London, he then began the long association with Charing Cross Hospital which has proved so fruitful.

He has been a leading advocate of many of the humanising changes which have occurred in the hospital treatment of birth, babies and children in the past ten years.

Some changes that Dr Jolly has instituted at Charing Cross seemed re*volutionary at the time,* but are now accepted as common practice.

For instance, he is a great supporter of mothers having their babies in bed with them as much as possible, and said: "It isn't something which can only be achieved in modern, small-ward surroundings. Charing Cross is a Victorian hospital with huge old wards and to sit *in one at night amid per*fect peace because all the babies are sleeping contentedly with their mothers is quite an experience."

He is now prepared to go further with the involvement of the family in a new baby and suggests that, in some cases, existing children should be present at a sibling's birth. "I recently had a couple who wanted to bring their four-year-old son along to the birth," he said. "It took the hospital a week to make up its mind and it proved to be a fine idea — the little boy's excitement at seeing the baby's head emerging encouraged his mother just when she was tiring badly. I'm not saying it would work for every family but this couple had the confidence to know their son would react maturely."

This, he said, is the heart of his philosophy. "I don't try to persuade anyone of anything. I just try to give the commonsense advice that enables parents to handle their children with enough confidence so the odd mistake doesn't matter."

The welcome close involvement of fathers and the family is not, he believes, something men have sought for themselves. "Even quite recently, birth and babies were such a woman's province that I don't think men would have got round to thinking about it. I believe it has come about through the greater assertiveness of women wanting a say in how both the medical profession and their partners react in the context of birth and child care."

A man's involvement should, he believes, start as early as possible. "I firmly believe that being present during his partner's labour will help a man bond much better with his child and want to be involved with its care. But it should start earlier than this — after all, the man is expectant too. His partner's pregnancy is a tremendously exciting time for him."

In this connection, he feels men should be en*couraged to make ante*natal visits with their partners.

"This is why we need to improve ante-natal services, for the convenience of both partners," said Dr Jolly.

EATING IN WITH BON VIVEUR

LET'S GET STEAMED UP OVER CRUELTY TO VEGETABLES

WE grow the finest vegetables in the world but that is no justification for their suffering when they reach our kitchen doors.

Even now letters stream in whenever we mention the word "steamer," though there are only four vegetables which should ever be boiled. Such letters disclose the shattering fact that a vast majority are still slung into tap water, boiled until soft, when their goodness, together with the water, is slung down the kitchen sink.

Currently, fish shops are few and hard to find, but, conversely, this seems to have increased home cooks' awareness of both fish scarcity and high prices. So do please pass on, as we are currently doing, the name and telephone number of an invaluable fish van man to your chums in the area.

Ours is currently bringing fresh fish to our doors once a week. Our van man even sells us skate backs, which are superb when oven cooked, as we offer them to you this week, in the French manner called Filets de Raie Normande. They are a treat.

Because this is old moan week with us, we frankly resent people who extol culinary simplification to the point of absurdity: such as the sloshing together of yogurt and whipped cream and calling it a "pudding," when really it is no more than a base. When entertaining try our Crème Bon Accueil served with a dishful of easily-made Langues de Chat, just based on that yogurt/cream idea but taking only a maximum 10 minutes to produce.

THE RECIPES

POTAGE AU CRESSON

INGREDIENTS: 1 fat bunch of dark green, large-leaved watercress; 3 medium peeled potatoes, steamed until soft then mashed finely; 1 slightly-rounded tablespoon flour; 2 rounded tablespoons rendered-down bacon or chicken fat; freshly milled black pepper-corns; 2½pts milk.

METHOD: wash and pick off any discoloured leaves, rough-chop the watercress bunch, stalks and all. Dissolve the chosen fat in a medium saucepan. Add the chopped watercress and stir over a mild heat until collapsed. Remember if choosing bacon fat that this is generally so salty it needs pre-soaking in boiling water before wiping and using. Scatter on the flour, stir thoroughly until thick and pasty, then stir in boiling milk gradually. Simmer for 35min. Emulsify or rub through an ordinary sieve with cooked potatoes. Return to saucepan, raise once more to boiling.

Taste, adjust seasoning with pepper and maybe a mere smidgeon of salt. Serve in heated soup cups and float one or two extra dark green leaves on the top surface of each serving.

NOTE: a rosette of piped whipped cream may be added to top surface for special occasions. Just remember to push a couple of watercress leaves on to each rosette.

RAIE NORMANDE

INGREDIENTS: four 5in to 6in long skate backs; 2 very thin, de-rinded bacon rashers (ideally back bacon); 8 medium to large flat mushrooms and their separated chopped stalks; 2oz grated hard cheese; 1 (optional) peeled then crushed-to-pulp garlic clove; 1 fl oz vegetable oil; 2 fl oz dry white cooking wine; ¼pt tomato puree; 1 flat teaspoon real curry paste (masala); 1 flat teaspoon salt; 2 rounded tablespoons freshly-milled parsley heads; 1 rounded eggspoon milled black peppercorns; 3oz fine, soft brown or white crumbs; 1 No 2 beaten egg.

METHOD: prepare, then mix, garlic pulp with finely-chopped mushroom stalks, cheese, chosen crumbs and half the parsley. Cut the prepared bacon into lengthwise ½in wide strips. Spread vegetable oil over base of a shallow chafing dish. Lay on the 4 skate backs, then season very lightly with salt and pepper. Trellis over the criss-crossed bacon strips. Spread the dark insides of the mushrooms with the crumb mixture. Place stuffed mushrooms over the fish. Work together the wine, tomato puree, masala paste and the well beaten egg. Spoon carefully overall. Cover with aluminium foil and bake on mid-shelf at 325 deg (Gas 3) for 25 to 30min depending on fatness of skate backs. Serve scattered with remaining parsley.

GARLIC OR HERBY BREAD

Slice through a length of French bread without severing base crusts. Spread the resultant fan of linked bread slices thickly with chosen herb butter on both sides. Press firmly together. Heat for service well-wrapped in foil for 10min at 275 deg (Gas 1) on top shelf of oven. Make up butters: by working into 4oz butter 2 peeled, crushed garlic cloves, 1 scant flat teaspoon salt and of black pepper. For Herby Bread replace garlic with finely-chopped tarragon, parsley or chives.

SALADE BRESSANE

INGREDIENTS: 1 teacupful of cold cooked chicken (brown and white meat) cut into matchsticks; 6 very small gherkins; 12 pointed radishes with ½in stems remaining; 2 No. 3 thinly-sliced, hard-boiled eggs; 1 cos lettuce washed and torn; ¼lb cold, cooked chipolatas; 1 teacup real mayonnaise; 12 well-drained and pressed capers; 1lb smallish steamed new potatoes sliced with their scrubbed skins remaining; 1lb very small, whole, peeled tomatoes; chopped fresh tarragon.

METHOD: mix prepared capers, gherkins and chicken with mayonnaise. Spread torn lettuce pieces neatly over a flat dish. Turn chicken mixture into a mound at centre. Split the cooked chipolatas in halves lengthwise and arrange around chicken mound. Encircle with sliced potatoes then encircle with outer border of very small whole peeled tomatoes scattered with chopped fresh tarragon and finish with a final border of hard-boiled egg. Pare radishes back into petals. Steep in salted cold water to curl and use to decorate.

CREME BON ACCEUIL

INGREDIENTS: ¼pt plain yogurt; ¼pt whipping cream; soft dark brown sugar to taste; 1oz cooking chocolate (couverture) or Chocolat Meunier; 1 level dessertspoon coffee powder; 1 dessertspoon each of Tia Maria or Creme de Cacao and of brandy.

METHOD: whip cream until it holds a peak. Draw in the yogurt gradually. Stir in sugar to taste. Place 1fl oz cold water in a tiny pan, add coffee powder and chocolate. When melted and bubbling slightly over a very low heat remove and stir in brandy and Tia Maria. If short of time slip into freezer just to harden mixture sufficiently to spoon into four portions. Otherwise refrigerate for 30min first.

LANGUES DE CHAT

INGREDIENTS: 2oz unsalted butter; 2oz finest possible flour; 1 No 2 egg; 3 slightly-rounded tablespoons vanilla-flavoured fine castor sugar.

METHOD: cream butter in a warmed bowl. Add sugar. Beat mixture for 2min. Beat in previously well-beaten egg. Draw in a very little flour and beat until smooth. Incorporate remaining flour. Use a teaspoon to draw mixture into thin, flat and narrow 'tongues', on waxed paper on a flat baking sheet. Space at least 1in apart. Bake at 375/400 deg (Gas 5/6) mid-shelf using one only as a first test. When faintly tinged with brown at the edge these biscuits are sufficiently cooked, after which they cool and firm up when removed with a metal spatula from the sheet. Store in an air-tight tin.

Wrapped up in fashion

A RECENT weekend in New York did make Washington seem a little provincial. Take the matter of men's skirts.

These are not in evidence yet even in Washington's Georgetown, but in Manhattan they are selling to men coming into the boutiques in conservative three-piece suits, according to Greenwich Village shop-owner Paul Monroe.

"Men like to show off. Men like to flaunt, men like to walk around and strut," he declared. His own dark skirt suited his eye make-up.

At Chartvari, a trendy Manhattan emporium, brown pinstripe men's skirts sell for $395, with a matching jacket for $315.

At Bergdorf Goodman, male customers have been clamouring for the latest shipment of designer skirts from Jean-Paul Gaultier in Paris.

IN WASHINGTON

Mapping out a plan for blind tourists

THIS SUMMER, blind and partially-sighted people visiting Winchester will have a unique amenity; they will be able to go to the Tourist Information Centre and ask for a tactual map and guide of the city centre in Braille.

Winchester has become the first town in the country to provide such a facility and it has come about as a result of a sympathetic and imaginative Tourist Officer, Mark Smith, and the inventiveness of cartographer Ian Greatorex.

"The maps are based on those that blind people are given when they move into an area," said Mark Smith, "but the emphasis is on places of interest to tourists."

Ian, a 22-year-old cartography graduate, lives in the town. Last year he got an Honours Degree from Oxford Polytechnic in geography and cartography and as part of the course wrote a thesis on tactual mapping.

"It was very experimental and I had to borrow a Braille typewriter from a social worker," he said. He became so interested in the subject he applied to Edinburgh University to continue studying it for a PhD. He was offered a place and approached Winchester City Council for a grant towards the fees. Mark Smith saw his map of Oxford and was so impressed he asked him to make one for Winchester.

Now Ian has made a large card-backed and brightly-painted map for the partially-sighted to be kept in the Tourist Centre, and portable four-page book versions 11in by 11in with index and key to the symbols which can be borrowed by visitors. All the wording is in Braille.

"The success of the project will depend on other Tourist Centres taking up the idea so a blind person will know that such a map exists," said Mark Smith.

He said many blind people were attracted to historic towns. "They can't see them, but they can get a sense of the size of the cathedral, for instance, through the sound of the bells. Now, if they're going on a guided tour, they can come in here, study the large map and get to know something about the place be*fore they set off.* Or they can borrow the small maps and take them with them."

The maps can also be of value to blind people in general. Fifty-three-year-old Jeffrey Thompson, who works for Barclays Bank in Winchester, was born with glaucoma and lost his sight completely when he was nine. Ian's map has given him a new insight into the town he has lived in for seven years.

"Before I had the map I could take you from A to B in Winchester, but I didn't know the names of the streets," he said. "I didn't need to. Now I've discovered what they're called. I can tell if a street is curved and by using the symbols, which are EEC-recognised, I know where the grass verges are, the pedestrian precincts, steps, telephone boxes, and lots of other things. It really gives you the feel and shape of the city."

With a grant from the Enterprise Allowance Scheme and a Business Development loan from the National Westminster Bank, Ian is hoping to produce maps for other towns following Winchester's lead.

He has written to 900 Tourist Centres, castles and stately homes, but has only had 10 replies so far, with Tunbridge Wells and Bath the only two expressing interest.

"Some said they didn't have the funds," said Ian, "but for £150 a town could be supplied with a hand-painted map and five guides and if it only helped a few people until the idea was more widely known, it would be something."

HESELTINE'S FUDGE

IF THE STATEMENT on the Defence Estimates were the accounts of a public company they would at best have sent the share price sliding and at worst been qualified by the auditors. The picture which Mr MICHAEL HESELTINE, the Defence Secretary, is trying to present to the world has only a passing resemblance to reality. The White Paper claims that the defence budget for the current year "will provide for annual real growth in the region of 3 per cent." In order to reach this number there has been some pretty ruthless fudging. On the basis of last year's planned spending of £17·03 billion, the £18·06 billion for 1985-86 represents a 6 per cent. cash increase. If the 3 per cent. real growth figure is to make sense it means that defence inflation is now running at a good deal less than the underlying 5 per cent. prevailing in the economy as a whole. In fact, according to the White Paper on public spending published just over three months ago, the actual out-turn for defence last year was nearer to £17·25 billion. In other words, unless Mr HESELTINE's much-vaunted efficiency drive has produced a staggering reversal of the usually positive relative price effect which applies to defence, spending will barely rise in real terms. If the Treasury has its way in subsequent years defence expenditure will decline by 1·1 per cent. and then 1·6 per cent. in real terms.

The most worrying aspect of this squeeze on the defence budget, after seven fat years in which spending has risen in real terms by over 20 per cent., is that Mr HESELTINE does not seem prepared to accept that some rather painful decisions will have to be made if the books are to be balanced. According to the respected defence economist DAVID GREENWOOD, adherence to the "programme in being" will result in a defence funding gap of nearly £4 billion by 1987-88. Even if Mr HESELTINE and his controversial poacher-turned-gamekeeper ally, Mr PETER LEVINE, succeed in getting spectacularly better value for money, it will not be enough. The signs of strain are already there. Although the commitment is made to maintain a 50-strong destroyer and frigate force, the build rate of new ships is inadequate to realise it. Cheese-paring and salami-slicing can postpone the day of reckoning at some cost to morale and efficiency, but they cannot do so indefinitely.

SANCTIONS AND NICARAGUA

ONLY CYNICS WOULD take the view that President REAGAN'S announcement in Bonn yesterday of a total trade embargo on Nicaragua was a clever move by the Great Communicator to divert attention from the foul-up, or well-intentioned muddle, over his visit to Bitburg military cemetery. In fact Mr REAGAN has now decided to get really tough with that tiny State on the central American isthmus which none would deny is run by a bunch of youngish Marxists but who more or less fairly won power in last November's elections. He is imposing economic sanctions, among the strongest ever taken by the United States, banning all Nicaraguan ships and aircraft from entering the United States, and abrogating the 27-year-old U.S.-Nicaraguan Friendship Treaty.

It could be argued that Mr DANIEL ORTEGA, the Nicaraguan President, was asking for trouble when he as good as celebrated Mr REAGAN'S humiliation by Congress over a $14 million aid package to the Contras fighting the Sandinistas by straightaway popping off to Moscow. There the Kremlin predictably made all the familiar noises about economic aid, and political and diplomatic support to uphold Nicaragua's sovereignty i.e. maintain the Sandinistas in power. Nothing, it should be noted, was said about military aid but the United States is right when it insists Nicaragua has close military and security ties to both the Soviet Union and Cuba and believes in subverting its neighbours.

Given that Congress opposes military intervention, proxy or direct, and will sign no blank cheques for warmaking, and that the White House albeit reluctantly has now accepted the fact, a further economic squeeze on Nicaragua was a strong runner. Sanctions, of course, are not always successful and can even be counterproductive. But the United States happens to be Nicaragua's top trading partner supplying 20 per cent. of imports and taking 18 per cent. of exports, and a blockade is feasible. America's allies in Europe and elsewhere may prefer to remain aloof from events in Nicaragua, trusting, no doubt, that all will be well just as long as its government does not opt for a fully fledged Marxist-Leninist dictatorship with all that entails. Sanctions might drive Nicaragua further into the Kremlin's embrace. Hopefully they will bring about a cease-fire, and give the Contadora regional peace effort a new lease of life.

NO TIME FOR INDIFFERENCE

SOME TORY SUPPORTERS may be tempted to vote for the Alliance or abstain in today's local government elections. There will be many reasons for this: a desire to give the Government a mid-term warning that its support cannot be taken for granted, concern about the teachers' strikes or proposals to abolish the State Earnings Related Pension and a general dissatisfaction about the way the Government has managed the economy and failed to reduce unemployment. Add to this a clear demoralisation among its supporters in the shire councils and a somewhat lacklustre campaign and there is the recipe for a rather gloomy result.

A surprisingly large number of people believe that the result of the elections has little relevance. According to a Gallup poll in today's DAILY TELEGRAPH, nearly as many voters thought the result did not matter as said that it did. It is an attitude partly born of a belief that nowadays central government controls everything and partly because in the shire counties the Labour Left still has to make the inroads that it has done in the metropolitan areas. Another disturbing conclusion is that people are prepared to pay higher rates if that means better services. The Government's argument that it is possible to cut spending and retain services does not seem to have got across.

It remains to be seen if voters will feel the same way after a year's rule by a Labour or a hung council. Rates in Labour counties have risen more quickly than in Tory councils, though they appear to have successfully laid the blame—however unjustifiably—at central government's door. It may well be that the lure of the Alliance and the newly respectable Labour party proves attractive especially at a time when the Government is unpopular. But should people wake up on Friday to four more years of Labour rule or even a hung council, they will have to pay for the consequences.

Why the Tories must build up a new head of steam

RICHARD RYDER, MP, argues that there is a long way to go for Mrs Thatcher's Government

IT was a poor week for the Conservative Government and little better for the Opposition. The Prime Minister took flak for being absent again, in Washington and Ottawa, playing the part of a world statesman.

At home, in a by-election the Conservatives lost 9,500 votes and Labour 5,500 while the Liberals gained extra support. A two-day House of Commons debate on the uncertain state of the economy seized headlines, and a Government committee reported on the virtues and vices of phone tapping. And never to be outdone, Labour's dear old national executive committee contemplated joint activities with the Soviet Communist party.

THE year was 1957, in the fourth week of October — exactly six years after the Conservatives were elected in 1951, and two years before the 1959 General Election — which was a landslide victory for them.

Now it is six years since the Conservatives returned to power in 1979. Has the Government run out of ideas and steam and has Conservative self doubt (an established disease) crippled their morale? These questions, and several others, are being answered most vocally — and sometimes more effectively — by the Government's detractors in the House of Commons and media. Yet the Government not only has a credible story to tell but years of work ahead if its aim of transforming Britain is to be achieved.

The length of time required is no surprise to the realists who appreciated the gravity of the British disease in the 1970s and ascribed it to decades of collectivism and, of course, paternalism, that arch foe of enterprise.

It is a disappointment, though, to the ingenues who felt that quaint industrial and social attitudes would disappear once inflation and public spending were contained, more people owned homes and rotten trade union bosses received their comeuppances. If only it were so simple.

Industrial and social attitudes towards capitalism and personal responsibility have improved, yet an enterprise culture cannot evolve overnight. Besides, people on shop floors, or in open-plans, need even greater stakes in capitalism than those provided by home ownership and anonymous pension schemes.

They also need to see, around them, evidence of management commitment to wider share ownership. Alas, this task is made tougher by well placed paternalists, many of whom have spent careers conducting orderly retreats for capitalism, sometimes in the face of phantom opposition, and who cannot readjust to progress.

In this respect the difficulties confronting the Government are underlined by the serious contrasts between the British record on productivity and unit labour costs in manufacturing, and the figures of our major competitors. No wonder our position is still so bleak when the chairman of ICI helps himself to a £2,200 a week pay bonanza, and the director of the Scottish CBI lacks the nous to grasp that high wage rises cost jobs despite the fact that apprentice wages in the United Kingdom are on average 60 per cent. of adult totals, whereas in West Germany they are 20 per cent.

It is also sad that the abolition of the national insurance surcharge and other Government incentives to industry for investment purposes have often been squandered in pay awards instead.

To balance that is the impression that new breeds of managers are replacing the "orderly retreat" paternalists, who have dominated parts of British industry for so long with such damaging results.

Against this backcloth, the momentum of reform must be kept up, and its scope broadened to embrace a wider appeal. The language and priorities of 1979 are still appropriate, but may be insufficient to carry the Government through to a certain third term.

What does this entail? There are several measures which should be included in the next Queen's Speech, and presented as part of a co-ordinated package, not just as individually desirable. Labour mobility should be given a boost by introducing portable pensions and decontrolling new tenancies in the private rented housing sector, roads along which the Germans and the French have already travelled.

The Government's success with British Telecom needs to be followed up imaginatively for only 8 per cent. of British shares are in personal hands compared with 25 per cent. in the United States. A need for a genuine people's capitalism necessitates another look at the French Loi Monory system, which led to an extension of personal ownership by allowing tax deductions on income for purchases of new equity capital in quoted and unquoted companies.

Progress has already been made in competition policy but there is a long way to go. The recent drive to open up the professions to competition is particularly welcome. The Consumers' Association estimate that conveyancing charges have fallen by 30 per cent. over the past year following full exposure of the solicitors' monopoly.

Yet in Britain, legal remedies for the abuse of market power are inadequate. In the United States anti trust laws combat cartels, collusive behaviour and discriminatory discounting under the Robinson Patman Act.

More importantly, American laws allow individuals and firms, as well as Government agencies, to enforce anti trust laws. Britain's paternalistic system leaves the Director of Fair Trading with too many responsibilities, some of which should be privatised.

British planning laws, and the delays they cause, are seriously handicapping the self-employed and small businessmen all over the country. For example, the Stolport proposal for London's docklands, an exciting project, is still being held up by bureaucracy years after it was first mooted by Mowlem. There is no reason why the 1947 Town and Country Planning Act should not be amended to stimulate activity where demand exists.

Further blows against paternalism should be struck by permitting Sunday trading and reforming licensing laws. Successive Home Secretaries have ducked out of taking action but Mr Leon Brittan appreciates that Sunday shopping and the liberal licensing laws are vital to the principles of personal freedom.

THE differences, now within the Government, in so far as they exist, are between the ingenues and the realists. The ingenues want to call a halt to the Government's reformism: they thought wrongly, poor souls, that the task of re-shaping Britain would be straightforward and that every card would fall into place, just so. The realists, on the other hand, knew differently. They are right. We should all hope that they maintain the upper hand.

But they cannot be expected to do so unless the political aims of the Government are kept at the forefront of Ministers' minds, and their natural inclinations for consolidating ground already won are overcome by their desire to secure new territory.

In October 1957, Mr Harold Macmillan must have wondered whether his prospects for retaining office in 1959 were all that bright. From time to time some Ministers, today, may have the same doubts. They should be dispelled — whatever today's local Government elections tell us.

LONDON DAY BY DAY

Livingstone gives lesson to Kinnock

DESPITE barely concealed hostility from Neil Kinnock, Ken Livingstone, the Left-wing leader of the GLC, is now likely to set the tone for Labour's advertising campaign at the next General Election.

Labour leaders have been impressed by the aggressive £10 million advertising campaign devised, in part, by Boase, Massimi, Pollitt in favour of keeping the council.

The Labour party, unlike the Tories, has traditionally been hostile to the ad-men and has only consulted them as elections have become imminent. But Robin Cook, Labour's campaign co-ordinator, has just set up a "think tank," in which Boase's joint managing director, Chris Powell, is playing a significant part, to plot the party's advertising strategy.

With his agency's slogan "Say No to No Say" Labour found an issue with which to defy the Government. Despite his personal distaste for Livingstone, Kinnock is clearly determined to learn his lesson.

Caught napping

RICHARD HOLME, director of the Constitutional Reform Centre and former president of the Liberal party must today be rueing a singularly unfortunate example of bad political timing.

This morning, amid a flicker of publicity, the centre unveils the findings of a Mori poll which shows strong public opposition to political donations by businesses.

Plans for today's announcement were made well before Tuesday's embarrassing disclosure that the Liberals had benefited from the largest such donation ever made—£188,000 from the British School of Motoring. Holme will clearly have to do some fast talking.

A considerable debate has been raging in the Kent village of Otford over the purchase of more burial land now the churchyard is full. The local NEWS IN FOCUS put the matter in perspective last week when it reported: "Debating the urgency of the situation at the parish council meeting, some members suggested putting a crematorium on the wanted site, since 'going all the way to Tunbridge Wells to be cremated is a dreadful inconvenience'."

Sanity prevails

MANY readers were disturbed by my disclosure that the Left-wing GLC was planning to inaugurate a memorial to the victims of the Blitz on the anniversary of the RAF raid on Dresden.

After pressure from the Tories, joined by older Labour members who remember the suffering endured by Londoners, the council has now changed its mind and the £15,000 memorial will be unveiled on the anniversary of either the first or last Nazi attack on London.

The GLC has also agreed to drop references to Dresden or Hiroshima on the monument, but despite this the Conservatives at County Hall are wary. Neville Beale, the Tory spokesman on public services, tells me: "We are still going to have to watch them like hawks to ensure they don't stick something on the memorial like a reference to nuclear free zones."

In the picture

GUESTS arriving at No. 10 for Mrs Thatcher's dinner party for the Canadian Prime Minister Mr Mulroney, were surprised to find the interior bathed in television lights and cameras turning as the two Prime Ministers stood receiving.

Earlier in the week it had been reported that some of Mulroney's entourage, keen to make the most of his opportunities, had sought to get TV cameras into Buckingham Palace, where he lunched yesterday with the Queen.

So guests at No. 10, none of whom could remember television being admitted for an evening function, concluded that Mulroney must have a lot of clout.

They were entirely wrong. This year marks the 250th anniversary of No. 10, first occupied by Walpole. A film is being made about the place for showing in the autumn, so this was just a happy coincidence for the photogenic Mulroney.

Full and bye

THE life of Max Aitken was of such rumbustious ebullience that few will hear of his death without adding relief to their feelings. For nearly ten years he suffered increasing incapacity from a series of strokes which culminated three weeks ago in the amputation of a leg.

In better times in Australia for the Sydney to Hobart yacht race, Sir Max was intrigued to see a Roman Catholic priest arrive on the dockside to bless his boat Crusade just before the start. The priest was greeted by Sir Max with a cry of: "We have a lot in common—you are a Catholic and I am a Presbyterian. We're both extremists. Damn all moderates." Crusade was first to finish.

Bowled over

HOT blooded Australian cricket teams are none too complimentary about our weather in early summer and this year's party will have more cause for complaint than most. Back on the 1972 tour their fast bowler David Colley once wore three jerseys, a shirt and a vest when the temperature was only 54 deg. F.

Christopher Martin - Jenkins's "Cricketer Book of Cricket Eccentrics" also recalls that even the players are sometimes bored by the game. England's spin bowler, Phil Edmonds, has twice been in trouble with the authorities—once for lying on his back in the outfield and the second time, during a slow Calcutta Test match, for reading a newspaper.

But perhaps the oddest item in the book is the reproduction of a laconic final score in the Quad I Azam Trophy in Karachi, 1959. "1st innings Abdul Aziz retired hurt—0. 2nd innings Abdul Aziz did not bat, dead—0."

Power to his elbow

IN ARGYLLSHIRE to taste the splendid seafood now being farmed in Loch Fyne by former merchant banker Johnny Noble, I discovered that Noble not only possesses bountiful oyster beds but an early hydro-electric power station.

His home, Ardkinglas, at Cairndow, the village at the head of the loch, was built to the design of Sir Richard Lorimer in 1907. Lorimer also devised a dam which harnesses a small river, a power house and turbine.

Until 1983 only Ardkinglas benefited from the home-spun electricity but then the Government's energy Bill allowed anyone producing enough kilowatts to sell them to the national grid. Noble's plant generates a surplus of about 80,000 kW a year, yielding about £4,500.

Lost lobby fodder

LABOUR party managers in the House of Lords yesterday were seething over the absence of four peers from the crucial vote on the Government's local government abolition Bill. It passed by four votes.

The Bishop of Southwark mysteriously disappeared on the day, Lord Avebury, the Liberal peer, was five minutes too late because he had been writing letters and another Liberal, Lord Tanlaw, was caught in a traffic jam in Knightsbridge.

Most embarrassing of all was the loss of Baroness Vicker's vote, a Conservative who opposes abolition. She mistakenly went through the wrong lobby.

Own goal

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE POPE AND THE PRINCE

SIR—Your leader (April 30) on the question of Prince Charles's attendance at a Papal Mass, includes the statement that "the fundamental objection . . . is that one day he will be Governor of the Church of England."

With respect, Sir, the real fundamental objection is that the Pope does not recognise the Prince as the future head of the English Church, any more than he recognises the present Sovereign as its current head.

Until this happens, any transaction of a religious nature between these eminent figures must rest on a false foundation.

The Papacy has never recognised the supremacy of the monarch in England, but this issue is being carefully fudged by individuals in both Churches who feel that unity is more important than openness.

The present Pope has some admirable qualities as a man, but the claim tacitly staked when he knelt to kiss the earth of this country, is one that many Church members, not only Dr Paisley and "extreme evangelicals . . . a handful of English Protestants," would resist most determinedly.

Earlier this year a group of West Country churchmen went on record as saying they believe we are all being softened up to accept a Roman takeover. This was reported in sections of the Church Press.

Your leader points out that the Church of England is currently in such decline that the status of its "Supreme Governor" is in danger of becoming an anachronism. That may be so at present, but things could change and many of us fervently hope they will.

And in any case, if the position of Head of the Church of England is indeed so unimportant and trivial as your leading article makes it sound, how is it that the Pope cannot give way on this "small" point and accept with good grace that the English are eccentric enough to prefer their own Sovereign Lady to hold this position?

The fact that the Vatican is unyielding on this is a clear indication that the matter is not as anachronistic as some would like to have us believe.

MARGOT LAWRENCE
Edgware, Middx.

A chance missed

SIR—It is to be hoped that some reputable organ of the media will let it be known that not only Roman Catholics, but many Protestants, deplore the fact that their Royal Highnesses were prevented from sharing in the Pope's private Mass.

When there is so much talk of reunion, what a wonderful and simple gesture of reconciliation this would have been.

CATHERINE WALLETT
Hawkshead, Cumbria.

Political tiger in tank of nuclear disarmament

SIR—In his article headed "Peace movements that are spreading the word of Marx" (April 23), Mr Blake Baker made only a brief reference to the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament.

I was a "founder marcher," to and from Aldermaston, and other places, between 1958 and 1964, former "marshal" of the Hampstead CND contingent and also informally solicited as to whether I would be prepared to stand as candidate for the general secretaryship in the early days.

Much was made by CND (and the Press too, especially the "liberal" and Left publications) of the political neutrality of this movement. But the fact remains that a thick seam of Left-wing commitment soon put the political tiger in CND's tank at rank-and-file and committee level in London, and outside.

Although anxieties were sometimes ritualistically expressed regarding "the People's" nuclear bombs, anti-Americanism was, and is, endemic among CND marchers and supporters. It is an axiom of Left-wing fundamentalism. Christopher Price, in his book "The Disarmers," also refers to "the virulent anti-Americanism expressed (by members of the CND) in the columns of TRIBUNE.

Deducting Left-wing support from CND would (and still would) have made a huge hole in its ranks. Deducting Left support from CND's conception, management, and administration would have meant no CND at all.

Thus, CND's London region publicity committee had (in the early 1960s) a Communist party chairman, other members were mostly Communist party or Left-Labour including the writer (ex-Communist party).

CND's policy of a nuclear-free United Kingdom would result in a neutered Nato, a "Finlandised" Europe, and an isolated United States. This has been a major aim of Soviet policies since the 1950s.

PETER ABRAHAMS
London, N.W.3.

Hijacked council

SIR—As a former general secretary of the National Council for Civil Liberties, I must, in perplexity, agree with your leader "Whose liberty?" (April 30).

At two successive annual general meetings, those present, including some but not all trade unionists, shot their organisation in the foot and then the heart.

Collective and individual rights can be compatible. The Government is asserting State domination and promoting authoritarianism in a way which polarises opinion. Conservatives are at fault for, with important exceptions, not, through organisations like the NCLL, trying to link principles and practices.

But the NCCL has been hijacked by a bunch of authoritarians of the Left and we all stand to lose.

As one of the libertarians left, I reassert my plea for all libertarians, Left, Right and unwilling to accept either crude label, to come together in campaigns on particular issues or to help to create an alternative to the now discredited NCCL.

The incorporation into domestic law of the European Convention of Human Rights might help.

TONY SMYTHE
London, N.4.

Disease of apathy

SIR—Lord Grimond's reference (Personal View, April 29) to Scottish ratepayers is timely. I am anything but apathetic about the rise in my domestic rates of 50·57 per cent., following revaluation, but I would like to know what Lord Grimond recommends me to do: refuse to pay? Go to prison as a martyr? Assassinate my regional and district councils?

I have already written to the Prime Minister and my MP and received the usual assurances of sympathy and urgent action. However, my rate demand has arrived, and presumably, must be paid.

I am anything but apathetic, but what can I do?

CEDRIC THOMSON
Edinburgh.

Job creation

SIR—The chairman of the Housebuilding Council seems to suggest that there is a need to generate more jobs in the South-East of England with attendant demand for more houses and factories (April 25).

Surely the need is to create jobs in the North where unemployment is a major social problem? Creation of more jobs in the South-East only exacerbates the problem of unemployment elsewhere and at the same time destroys the South-Eastern landscape.

Could it be that the housebuilders find development less profitable in the cities and the North? It is perhaps a case of not being able to see the woods for the greed?

DEREK MARTIN
Chairman,
Chiltern Soc.
Marlow, Bucks.

Keyboard mathematics as a substitute

SIR—So the school inspectors recommend, after the Cockcroft committee on mathematics teaching, that long division and logarithms should go for the under-16s.

The main impetus for change seems to be that maths exam results are not very good. I doubt that they will be improved by successive removal of such "impediments," any more than they were by the previous fall from favour of rote learning of multiplication tables.

A society that cannot multiply or divide (and it may well not be too hot on addition and subtraction) is then to be taught more of the use of calculators and computers. Is this the sound basis for teaching suited to application in normal life that is the claimed aim?

Keyboard mathematics, thinking through the finger-tips, is dangerous as a substitute to, rather than an aid in, numeracy. Faults in keying or key sequences lead to the "rubbish in—rubbish out" problem; the precision of the result may too easily be seen as accuracy.

As this negative progress in simple arithmetic continues, the adult of tomorrow, with a basic education only, is condemned to lose a simple ability—a feeling of numerical size and sense of blunder. And fumble or blunder is the big risk with calculators.

The operators of simple comptometers, which were introduced early this century, at least knew what arithmetic was about. By the end of the century a large part of the population will have as much sense of number manipulation as the Romans, with their letter numerals.

I can only suspect that the teachers and academics who have been involved in these proposals, and their acceptance, do not have a clear view of the application of mathematics outside the classroom; this may account also for the obvious failure of that profession to "get it across," long reflected in exam results.

Please, cannot the Education Secretary take wider advice, so that the real road to practical mathematical ability is followed, even for those who do not go on to higher education rather than a path that is still, in spite of disclaimers, directed at school "results" of the right size?

Innumeracy, as much as illiteracy, is surely much too important to the whole future of today's schoolchild to be risked by the application of yet another fashion—determined of teachers and by teachers and, it might appear, for teachers.

H. A. HOPKINS
Wokingham, Berks.

Trouble with calculators

SIR—The Chinese have had trouble with calculators for many centuries.

I can remember vividly when in Singapore a few years ago I was buying a few things in a Chinese shop. While the girl was working it out with her abacus I was able to do it much more quickly mentally.

She was amazed.

R. J. LEES
Lower Bourne, Surrey.

No punishment

SIR—Sir Gilbert Longden ("Seeking a Solution to School Vandalism," April 20) must have the concurrence of countless thousands in his proffered solution, but surely in the context of this nation's subservience to the Strasbourg tablets there can be no physical punishment of the malefactors, however dire the need?

Let us never cease to proclaim, Sir, that we live in a hypocrisy.

JOHN F. RYDER
Wallasey, Merseyside.

Oxford admissions

SIR—The first paragraph in Miss Margot Norman's report (April 23) about Oxford University's attempt to attract more pupils from State schools is a little premature.

Oxford's new admissions system comes into effect next year so that its results can hardly be shown in this year's admissions figures. As Miss Norman explains, the bulge in independent school entry is because of the last generation of seventh-term applicants as well as the usual number of fourth-term applicants.

Her report does, however, suggest that entry may not be possible in future for post-"A"-level candidates. This is emphatically not true. They are not eligible to enter by the written examination method but we would be delighted to consider post-"A"-level candidates, on the basis of their academic merit and an interview, with all other candidates, in December.

In her last paragraph she suggests that the (relatively small) drop this year in State school applicants "could be due to a general feeling that the new system would make it harder to get a place." What we said was: "The knowledge of the increase in competition to be faced at Oxford this year (i.e. under the end of the old system) resulted in some prospective applicants from all types of schools applying elsewhere."

We expect the figures for State schools to return at least to normal for the applications for 1986/7.

Information Officer,
Oxford University.

'£100m shortfall' in new shock for Lloyd's syndicate

By R. BARRY OBRIEN

MEMBERS of a Lloyd's syndicate under Department of Trade investigation into claims of misappropriation of £38 million of their money have now suffered an even bigger blow.

New losses which could exceed £100 million have come to light since the recovery last year of most of the missing £38 million.

The discovery has sent fresh shockwaves through Lloyd's, hub of the world's insurance market, and further dented its tarnished image.

The losses have resulted from business transacted in 1982 when the syndicate was managed by Mr Peter Dixon, a former chairman of PGW Underwriting Agencies, a subsidiary of the Minet Holdings insurance group.

£1 million fine

Mr Dixon, who is alleged to have received £8,400,000 of the misappropriated £38 million, was dismissed after the start of the Department of Trade investigation in November 1982 and a High Court action against him for recovery of the money.

He has since been fined £1 million by Lloyd's disciplinary committee and expelled for life. He is now an insurance broker in Miami.

As a result of the misappropriation, some syndicate members were threatened with insolvency because of inability to meet cash calls and insurance claims.

£25 million retrieved

Inquiries and legal actions in several countries including Switzerland and Liechtenstein recovered £25 million of the money which had been channelled into a trust fund in Gibraltar.

It was refunded to syndicate members and the balance of £15 million still missing was made up by Minet Holdings and an American company, Alexander Services Inc.

The syndicate is now under the management of Richard Beckett Underwriting Agencies, also a subsidiary of Minet Holdings.

The new losses for 1982 have come to light now that accounts for the year are being prepared at the end of the three-year Lloyd's accounting period.

Mr J. R. K. Beckett, chairman of Richard Bennett Underwriting Agencies, has written to members of the syndicate, No. 918, warning them than substantial financial demands may be made upon them.

"I appreciate that this news will obviously cause you great concern. I must obviously ask your forbearance until such time as we have completed our review," he says.

A spokesman for the company said Mr Bennett would be writing to members again today detailing the size of the losses and the amounts required from them.

Members of Lloyd's have to show they are worth at least £100,000 and deposit £25,000 in cash. Assets of £100,000 entitle a member to do business to the value of £200,000 in premiums.

The present individual premium limit of £600,000 is to be increased to £1 million next year.

A Lloyd's spokesman said: "The same people who were done out of £38 million have now been hit by these very havy new losses. It is unfortunate for them that members of Lloyd's are individuals in trade and cannot limit their liability.

"If a managing agent says 'Sorry, chaps, we've made a thumping great loss and you've each got to cough up £50,000,' they have to do it. They are totally liable to their last penny."

'BLESSING IN DISGUISE' FOR LOCAL PRESS

Recent disputes at newspapers in Portsmouth and Wolverhampton over new technology have changed the pattern of industrial negotiation in the regional Press, Mr Tim Morris, retiring president of the Newspaper Society, said yesterday at its annual meeting in London.

Mr Morris, chairman of the Birmingham Post and Mail, said the industry now had a chance to change old practices to the benefit of employers, employees and customers.

He gave a warning of the threat to newspapers posed by commercial radio, cable television, and a BBC which might carry advertising. Mr Morris is succeeded as society president by Mr Robbie Thomas, 52, vice-chairman and editorial director of North Wales Newspapers.

REFORMS ROW AT EXCHANGE

By A. J. McILROY

SMALLER member firms of the Stock Exchange are to be offered greater compensation if they drop opposition to reforms the Exchange's ruling council says are necessary for survival in the new technology age.

The gesture is to be made in a letter from Sir Nicholas Goodison, Stock Exchange chairman, to the 4,500 membership.

The council has decided that without its reform package the Exchange will jeopardise its future as a central money market.

International banking, insurance and other financial institutions have the computer technology to by-pass the Exchange and its services unless it "accommodates them and the new technology era."

The solution, the council decided, was for member firms to sell control to the outside "giants" who would achieve their aim of buying into the Exchange, its prestige and services, thus ensuring its future for all members, big and small.

Hostile silence

The letter makes it clear to members that the present proposed maximum value of "compensation" shares at £10,000 will no longer apply and that a higher figure could be agreed.

Sir Nicholas was shaken by the "hostile silence" that greeted his attempts in London on Tuesday to win over a meeting of brokers.

This was the first of a series of meetings with Exchange members in London this week. Sir Nicholas can expect more hostility when he visits Leeds, Glasgow, Manchester, Liverpool, Bristol and Birmingham, from May 15 to 18.

75 p.c. majority

The ruling council's reform package comes before the entire membership, voting by proxy if necessary, on June 4 in London.

The council needs only a simple majority for its proposal to allow outsiders to buy control of member firms.

But it requires a 75 per cent majority to get through recommendations including the one dealing with "compensation" for members too small to attract outside buyers.

Small member firms protested that they were being "short-changed." Partners in the big firms were making millions by selling control to outsiders while they had to be content with a maximum "pay off" of £10,000.

UN STAFF PROTEST

By Our Geneva Correspondent

Bureaucrats at United Nations headquarters in Geneva have reportedly held a brief work stoppage to express concern over the quality of food in the building's restaurants and a reduction in the size of drinks poured at its delegates' lounges.

Ball for Miss Biddle has a bizarre touch

By IAN BALL in New York

NEW YORK society yesterday was trying to find the right pigeonhole for one of the most bizarre social events in the city's recent history.

It was a white-tie ball that attracted refined Biddles from Philadelphia's Main Line, call girls from Greenwich Village, Wall Street lawyers and a pornographer or two.

The event even had a link with that fundamental episode in the establishment of the American aristocracy, the arrival in New England in 1620 of the pilgrims who had sailed from England aboard the Mayflower.

Tuesday night's affair, in fact, was known as the Mayflower Defence Fund Ball. The 300 guests paid around £32 each o ensure that a Biddle in trouble could afford the best possible lawyers.

A Biddle in trouble? Well, no Biddle over the centuries has been charged with running a house of prostitution until now.

So, for Miss Sydney Biddle Barrows, a 33-year-old blonde blue-blood, the ball was organised as part of the efforts to restore a tarnished corner of the family honour.

Miss Biddle Barrows, a slim beauty, has become lately a staple for the American tabloids. On the day of her arrest last year she was dubbed the "Mayflower Madam," a name she has now trademarked in case someone else tries to make off with the film rights.

For her appearance at the ball she chose a strapless pink taffeta gown, set off by Biddle family jewels, including an antique pearl necklace and long white kid gloves. She received her guests like a debutante at a coming-out ball.

A few individuals with listings in the New York social register appeared in a gesture of solidarity. Distant cousins Ernest and Anna Drexel Biddle motored up from Philadelphia.

Miss Biddle Barrows is due in court next week on charges that she was the mastermind behind a high-class prostitution ring directed from a town house on Manhattan's fashionable East Side.

Her explanation is that she was simply running a high-class escort agency.

ROYAL TOUR REST DAY

By ALAN COPPS in Bari

THE Prince and Princess of Wales spent yesterday at sea aboard the Royal yacht Britannia on their way from Sicily to the southern Italian port of Trani, where they will disembark today before visiting the provincial capital of Bari.

It was the first full day of rest for the couple during their 17-day "Grand tour" of Italy, which has met with a warm and friendly reception from people throughout the country.

Today they will visit the cathedral of Trani and will then go sightseeing in the centre of Bari which dates from the times 1,000 years ago when crusading Normans dominated this part of Italy.

In addition to their sightseeing the Prince and Princess will visit a school for deaf children, have lunch at Bari Yacht Club and hold a reception aboard Britannia this evening. The Royal Marines band from the Royal yacht will beat Retreat on the quayside.

Tomorrow will be another rest day while Britannia sails to Venice where the tour will end on Sunday. It is expected that the young Princes William and Henry will be flown out to join their parents there.

The Britannia is then expected to take a short Mediterranean cruise before the Royal party return to England from Sardinia.

Hay fever wrecks university hopes in summer exams

By SARAH THOMPSON Education Staff

HAY fever can have such a bad effect on examination results that a third of all teachers would like pupils to sit summer examinations earlier, and believe that chances of a university place can be demolished by the allergy.

About 100,000 young people this summer will be suffering from hay fever while taking important examinations, says a report published yesterday.

Many will drop out of the exam race after O-levels.

There will be the worst sufferers, who cannot face another sumer of trying to beat the examination hall clock with streaming eyes and noses.

Dr John Guy, a deputy head and science teacher at Trinity School, Leamington Spa, and Dr Tom Smith, the medical journalist, say hay fever can reduce a pupil's marksby five per cent.

Fear of excuses

This has to be set against the fact that examination boards divide candidates into grade groups in such a way that sometimes 1·8 per cent. can be the difference between a grade B and a grade D at A-level.

Some teachers inform examiners and universities if a pupil is a sufferer, but 14 per cent. of the teachers in the 305-school survey would not do so in case it was thought to be an excuse for bad performance.

In Scotland exams are taken in early May.

But the Secondary Examinations Council is very reluctant to consider any changes to the exam timetable for the sake of the 10 per cent. of candidates who suffer.

"It would mean altering the entire school and academic year," said a spokesman yesterday. "It would mean flying in the face of tradition."

Sufferers wil soon get the bad news that the new GCSE examinations will probably (after consultation) be taken slightly later than current examinations, and be confined to June.

Dust and grass

Schools could help hay fever sufferers by finding a room with closed windows, said Dr Guy. But, he added, this is impracticable in most schools.

Teachers could allow sufferers to take exams somewhere gymnasium—dust is a serious irritant to children, not only hay fever sufferers—which is usually near a playing field covered with mown grass.

TOUGHER ACTION ON TEACHERS

By JOHN IZBICKI
Education Correspondent

EMPLOYERS in various parts of the country toughened their attitudes towards striking teachers yestesday.

In Cambridgeshire and Norfolk, teachers who have been withdrawing their "goodwill" by boycotting after-school staff and parent meetings, have had their pay docked at the rate of £2 for every meeting missed.

"When parents meetings started 10 to 15 years ago it was absolutely clear that they were voluntary. Now they are taken for granted,' said Mr Nigel de Gruchy, deputy general secretary of the National Association of Schoolmasters and Women Teachers.

Furious parents

In Leicestershire, parents were furious when teachers went against their union's strict guidelines and walked out of examination classes preparing pupils for O and A levels and the CSE, shortly to be sat.

The teachers cocked a snook at the advice of the National Union of Teachers because, they claimed, only the invigilation of examinations had been exempted from strikes.

"The annual conference at Scarborough of the NUT made no mention of examination classes and we do not agree with the guidelines the union has sent us." Mr David Pollard, divisional NUT secretary for Leicestershire, said.

Another London borough — Brent—as well as Tameside in Greater Manchester have joined the authorities that have decided to band together to pressure and support the teacher's case. This brings the number of authorities to 31.

Meanwhile, a new hit list of 39 areas that will be seriously disrupted by strikes next week was announced by the NUT last night. They are:

STOCK markets enjoyed a generally firm session yesterday as new investment activity was encouraged by the optimism expressed in the latest survey from the Confederation of British Industry. With Lord Boardman, chairman of National Westminster Bank, intimating that further cuts in interest rates are on the cards, investors seemed to be feeling rather more confident about a resumption of the bull phase.

In the event, the expanding activity covered a wider range of industrial issues, with consumer stocks such as breweries and foods well to the fore.

Continuing enthusiasm for new developments on the takeover front was reflected in speculative demand for many of the old bid favourites, while company results and interim reports again prompted good features. The overall brighter tone saw the main market indices in good form, the "50" index closing 7 up at 978·4 and the "100" index 10·5 higher at 1,301·5, the latter being only 8·4 below its previous peak.

News of a possible consortium offer for Haden in opposition to the bid from Trafalgar House left Haden shares 20 higher at 331p after 333p. Trafalgar improved 4 to 346p. After a bout of profit-taking down to 435p in Thorn EMI early in the session, the shares were again supported on takeover hopes and rebounded to close 12 higher on balance at 456p, after 469p.

The stores sector continued to meet takeover speculation and Owen Owen, which advanced 30 on Tuesday, climbed 27 more to 255p, after 260p, albeit in thin market trading where deals were usually limited to 1,000 shares. Another old favourite to meet demand was Elys of Wimbledon, which jumped 55 to 465p, also in a thin and sensitive market; Owen Owen owns a large stake in Elys of Wimbledon.

Whispers of possible new bid developments helped Westland, 5 better at 149p, after 150p, while there was similar talk in Tootal, 2 firmer at 76p. Other bid fancies included Evode Group, at 140p, East Midland Allied Press, at 138p, and Evered, at 216p.

In contrast to the equity sections, government securities suffered a rather drab session against the background of the weakening pound, but selling was minimal and investors were said to be studying the market's yield structure with a view to buying action. The printed lists showed little change, but late values were £1/8 easier for choice.

Solid support developed for Bowater and the shares quickly climbed to 262p before ending 17 higher at 261p. Buyers were also looking at Reed International after confirmation of the sale of the groups wallpaper interests; the final price was 552p, up 6.

Following late overnight selling from the United States when the share price of B A T Industries touched 300p, the shares opened on a much steadier note at 318p and subsequently improved to 320p, a rise of 9 on the price prevailing at 5 p.m. on Tuesday. Dealers in British Aerospace considered the new Government offer price to be "rather tightly pitched" and the existing shares were 5 down at 390p, after 385p.

Midsummer Inns returned from suspension after the interim report and acquisition details and ended 25 up at 270p, after 280p. There was solid investment interest in Ladbroke Group, 9 up at 260p, while buyers also came for T S L Thermal Syndicate, at 315p, Saatchi & Saatchi, at 615p, Fogarty, at 92p, and Boustead, at 82p.

Several international issues, recently depressed by weakness in the dollar, were improving in late business. Imperial Chemical Industries ended 6 up at 737p and B T R 5 better at 707p. Other leaders to meet interest included Vickers, at 267p, and Cadburys Schweppes, at 164p.

The bank sector was in good form, with dealers pleased with the form of the capital raising operation by Lloyd's, 14 up at 559p, after 562p. National Westminster rose 11 to 608p, Midland 7 to 349p, and Barclays 5 to 355p. Elsewhere in financials, Exco International were wanted up to 675p, a gain of 18p.

Among building issues, John Mowlem were prominent after the results and ended 12 higher at 230p, after 238p. Dealers reported speculative interest in R M C, 10 up at 360p, while Magnet & Southerns continued their recovery movement to 134p. Planet Group returned from suspension after the bid from Heywood Williams and ended 8 better at 106p; Heywood Williams lost 6 to 140p.

Newfound interest in brewery and distillery issues saw prices moving higher under the lead of Bass, 19 to the good at 534p. Allied-Lyons ended 6 better at 180p, Whitbread 5 up at 202p, and Distillers 8 higher at 288p.

The outstanding market reaction to the day's batch of company results was in Shiloh, whose shares bounded ahead by 36 to 80p on the much-better-than-expected figures. Satisfactory responses to company results came from Marshall's Universal, at 67p, Spong Holdings, at 22p, and J W Spear, at 135p. However, Geers Gross ended 5 easier at 138p after their figures.

Press comment directed attention to the electronics sector and A B Electronics were a particularly good market at 457p, a rise of 30p. Farnell, whose results were announced on Tuesday, gained 6 to 201p, while a bear squeeze accelerated movement in Volex Group, which ended 18 higher at 175p. Cable & Wireless were firm after-hours at 538p, up 10p.

Selective buyers were again operating in the property share market and Daejan were a bright feature with a rise of 15 to 400p. Mountview Estates rose to 380p, Stock Conversion to 510p, and Land Securities to 300p.

Argyll Foods opened the batting in the food share market as early buyers brought a 10-point rise to 502p. Bassett Foods, an old favourite in the takeover stakes, were also 10 better at 192p, while other bright spots included Hillards, at 360p, and J Sainsbury, at 340p. Nurdin & Peacock hardened to 180p on the results and scrip issue news.

Vague suggestions of a possible counter-bid to the one from Associated Dairies left M F I Furniture Group 6 better at 286p. Moss Bros were also the subject of bid speculation and closed 18 better at 461p, while buyers took new positions in Harris Queensway, 10 up at 222p. Fine Arts, 5 higher at 84p, and Carpets International, 4 firmer at 75p.

In the oil share market, Tricentrol jumped 15 to 260p, but the movement was due more to hopes of a bid from Enterprise Oil than to the company's first quarterly report. Takeover hopes also lifted Burmah, 6 better at 231p, while British Petroleum recorded a rise of 8 to 565p.

Gold shares lost ground on a broad front as bullion tumbled $9·25 to $311·75.

Tailpiece

WHILE the market awaits the outcome of London & Midland Industrial's takeover offer for Allied Textile, it could be worth renewing interest in another cash-rich textile group which seems vulnerable to a bid approach. Nottingham Manufacturing have often been mentioned as a possible target for a predator, but in the absence of any developments, the shares have reacted from their 1985 high of 254p to the present 210p.

The company has started a policy of buying its own shares and clearly has no knowledge of any likely bid moves, but trade sources suggest that something could happen in the next month or so. In the meantime, the shares of this major supplier to Marks & Spencer could show recovery movement.

Natwest 'corporate branches'

NATIONAL Westminster is to create up to 150 "corporate branches" in a move aimed at improving the service to corporate customers, the bank announced yesterday. There are also plans to improve the bank's service to personal customers.

Over the next five years, National Westminster expects to close a total of 100 branches but believes the creation of corporate branches will mean greater job opportunities within the bank.

Tricentrol aims

TRICENTROL'S chairman James Lengcroft told yesterday's annual meeting that he did not expect a bid from Enterprise Oil (holder of 4·9 p.c.) and that Tricentrol would fight any takeover attempt.

A meeting between himself and Enterprise's chairman was being held but it would have no specific topic. Mr Lengcroft reiterated the formal Enterprise view that its stake in Tricentrol was solely strategic.

Tricentrol yesterday announced a net income of £7·9m for the first quarter of 1985 compared with £7·4m.

Foseco jumps

FOSECO MINSEP reports pre-tax profits of £34·5m for 1984, compared with £28·6m on total sales of £479·7m (£397·7m). Activity generally good in the majority of markets. The final dividend rises from 4·7p to 5·4p on July 2, making 8·2p (7·35p).

Sharp appointed

THE GOVERNMENT is expected to add Christopher Sharp to the 10-man organising committee for the City's proposed Marketing of Investments Board to appease complaints from the Building Societies Association.

Mr Sharp is general manager of the Newcastle-based Northern Rock Building Society, the country's sixteenth largest.

Composition of the committee, headed by Mark Weinberg of Allied Hambro, was announced in March.

Synterials repays

SYNTERIALS, the record £20m USM offering from James Capel in December 1983, is paying back £10·3m to disappointed shareholders by mid-August.

The issue flopped badly and the founder of the business resigned last year.

The shares, offered at 100p are now 8p after a 13-for-two scrip issue equivalent to 60p in their old form. The capital repayment is 5·5p a share now in issue.

Sears changes

LEONARD SAINER, who took over as chairman of Sears Holdings from its founder Sir Charles Clore in 1978, yesterday relinquished his position as chairman and was appointed life president.

Mr Sainer, 75, remains a director. Geoffrey Maitland Smith, joint chairman, becomes chairman and continues as chief executive.

Swiss ban

THE Swiss government, bowing to pressure from the United States, yesterday introduced legislation to ban insider trading in shares and bonds. The American Securities and exchange Commission has alleged that insiders have used the strict banking secrecy of Switzerland to make big profits from illegal Wall Street deals in shares of United States companies by dealing through Swiss banks.

Joining Chartered

STANDARD Chartered has recruited Michael Benson, a director of Lazards, to build a new investment management division within its merchant banking subsidiary. The bank expects the division to become a major force in the investment management field.

Aerospace sale price fixed at 375p a share

By DAVID BREWERTON

THE PRICE at which the Government is to sell its remaining stake in British Aerospace has been fixed at 375p a share, a discount of only 5 p.c. on the price ruling on Tuesday evening.

The City yesterday expressed surprise at the narrowness of the discount, but nevertheless the institutions accepted the sub-underwriting with minimal complaint as well as agreeing to participate fully in the 81 million shares being placed with them.

A total of 146·8 million shares are being put up for sale, of which 50 million are new shares being issued by the company itself and 96·8 million are being sold by the Government.

Of the 146 million shares, the 81 million allocated to the institutions another 25·8 million will be reserved for existing shareholders on a one-for-four basis. Five million are set aside for employees and at least 35·3 million will be publicly available under the offer for sale.

The entire share sale will raise £550 million, before expenses of around £21 million, £8 million of which will be met by the company. British Aerospace itself will collect some £180 million from the sale to add to the £180 million of net liquid resources it already has in its coffers.

Finance director Bernard Friend said yesterday that the cash would be put to good use immediately, but it was admitted that the capital raising was ahead of the time at which it would ideally have taken place. "We were pushed into this to some extent," he added.

The company feared, however, that had it not made its capital raising move at the same time as the Government sale, the market would not have taken too kindly to a further capital exercise in a couple of years' time.

In the event, the issue is being made against the background of an order book which has slipped slightly during the course of 1984, and against the statement from chairman Sir Austin Pearce that it is prudent to be cautious about the short term profit outlook.

The offer price represents 6·9 times earnings per share for 1984 and an historic yield of 5·2 p.c., ratings that are not regarded by analysts as demanding.

However, it is expected by leading analysts that earnings growth will be minimal this year and over the next few years as the tax charge increases and the diluting effect of the capital raising is brought into play.

That said, both the Government and the company are already assured of their money. The institutions have been encouraged by a commission of 1·5 p.c. on the shares which they have agreed to take up in the placing, as well as 1·25 p.c. on the shares they have underwritten.

"The pricing was as tight as it could have been," was the comment from engineering analyst Ewan Fraser of James Capel.

The sponsors point out, however, that by the time the partly paid element is taken into account—only 200p a share is payable on application with the remaining 175p due on September 10—and the fact that the shares can be traded free of stamp duty is reflected, the discount to the Tuesday price is 8 p.c. Add on commission, and the institutions are picking up the shares at an effective discount of 10 p.c. or so.

It has to be pointed out, too, that the market price was already weak in anticipation of the flood of new shares coming on to the market, so few fund managers will complain that they have been badly treated.

Both the company and the Government is anxious for the issue to be a success, not least, in the latter's case, because of the looming privatisation of British Airways.

Coup for Lloyds in $600m bond issue

By ANNE SEGALL

LLOYDS BANK yesterday joined the rush by Britain's big banks for extra capital by announcing a $600 million perpetual bond issue which will be the first of its kind to be approved by the Bank of England as primary capital under tough new guidelines issued last November.

The Lloyds move, regarded in the City as a major financial coup, will make the bank the best capitalised of all the clearers and will more than compensate for the impact of the Chancellor's Budget changes on leasing.

It will also eliminate the need for a rights issue by providing Lloyds with what amounts to a close substitute for equity.

Andrew Winckler, the director in charge of capital markets at Lloyds Bank International, where the issue was devised, said yesterday that Lloyds had been thinking of ways to satisfy the demands of both investors and the Bank of England ever since the ank issued its new guidelines last November.

"We rose to the challenge of devising a debt instrument which would have the characteristics of equity," he added.

Yesterday's issue by Lloyds is modelled closely on the pioneering perpetual bond issue by National Westminster a year ago and the later perpetual bond issue by Barclays.

Like both previous issues the Lloyds bonds take the form of floating rate notes with interest payable at six-monthly intervals.

But the distinguishing feature of the Lloyds issue which has helped win the special approval of the Bank of England is the fact that the proceeds can be used to meet losses, while bond holders would be treated as preference shareholders if the bank ever went into liquidation.

There is also a provision that Lloyds can suspend interest to bond holders if it has not paid or declared a dividend for six months.

Sir Jeremy Morse, Lloyds chairman, speaking at the bank's annual meeting yesterday, described the issue as "an important and innovatory step."

He told shareholders that an extraordinary general meeting would be called later this month or early in June at which they would be asked to approve the issue by agreeing to the creation of a special class of preference shares.

In its November paper the Bank of England indicated that bonds would have to be automatically convertible into equity in times of trouble if they were to count as primary capital. But a spokesman for the Bank confirmed yesterday that this requirement has been softened.

Midland chairman Sir Donald Barron is expected to unveil details of the bank's capital restructuring plans to shareholders at the bank's annual meeting on Friday.

Alliance adds ¼pc for savers

THE Alliance Building Society yesterday started a new round in the savings war by adding ¼ p.c. to the 9·75 p.c. return on the instant-access Gold account which it launched only two weeks ago. The move, expected to be followed by other societies, reflects the continuing poor cash inflow to societies despite the high rates on offer.

It is believed that net receipts for all societies were only £450 million to £500 million in April—an improvement on March's £214 million, but still little more than half the amount necessary to meet the increasing mortgage demand.

THE UNITED STATES Senate Republican leadership squeaked by with a 50-49 crucial procedural vote on the 1986 financial year budget. This does not mean that President Reagan's deficit problems are over, but it does buy the White House much-needed time.

The effect of the vote was not to approve a budget but to agree over which set of spending cuts and increases the battle will be fought. It is a significant Reagan win nonetheless because the vote also effectively locks the Senate into not straying from the final totals no matter what happens to the inner details.

This is wha the world's currency markets and Wall Street have been waiting for. As approved, the Senate version of the budget seeks to cut $51·9 billion in spending overruns from the financial year 1986 which begins October 1.

Instead of the roughly $225 billion deficit expected in this current period, the new budget would produce an overdraft of $172·3 billion.

Equally important, the Reagan-Senate budget would be a commitment to cut the projected deficits for th ecoming three budgets by a total of $297 billion so that by the 1988 year, which will encompass the next election campaign, the government overruns would be held to $101·3 billion, less than half the annual burden Wall Street's credit markets have had to bear in recent years.

Having said all this, it will now require all of Mr Reagan's powers of persuasion to make the Senate vote stick. This budget, more than any other confrontation, will be the strongest test yet of his ability to govern.

Unlike Parliamentary systems, no White House budget is an article of faith with the legislators of both chambers most of whom have their own agendas and constituencies even when they belong to the same party as the President.

This is especially true this year. Senate Republican leader Robert Dole is eyeing a 1988 run for the White House himself and presides over a fractious 51-49 majority at the best of times.

In the Democrat - controlled House there is open rebellion against Reagan policies—the M1's missile,—Nicaragua, the Bitberg visit—and the budget there will be cruelly treated.

So it is all the more important that Mr Reagan wins as much support for his views on the key testing points of the budget in the Senate if he is to stand a chance of surviving in the more hostile House.

There are lots of little battles which must be won, many of them with a familiar ring to British ears. There are cuts in student university support, reduced funds for urban programmes for the poor and disadvantaged, cuts in postal and mass transit subsidies and a hiving off of railway passenger service.

But the front will hold or give way on two key points. Mr Reagan wants to hold social security pension payments to the cost of living plus 2 p.c. over the next three years instead of a cost-plus-4 p.c. formula, promised the elderly some years ago.

Equally controversial is Mr Reagan's determination to increase the Pentagon's budget by 3 p.c. in each of the next three years despite $52 billion in unspent funds already stacked in military programme coffers.

Not surprisingly, yesterday morning Senate Republicans were rushing back to the floor to offer their own Pentagon cut — social security restoration amendments—even before Mr Reagan has a chance to return from Bonn. It will be a long and trying summer for him.

Syndicate shockers

MANY Lloyd's syndicates had an underwriting loss in 1982, the year for which accounts are now being closed, and a substantial number are telling members that even after adding investment income, results slumped into the red. But none of them will be disclosing losses on the scale due to be announced this afternoon by Richard Beckett Agencies for the syndicates that were formerly run by the scandal-ridden P.C.W Underwriting.

Rumours round Lloyd's have become wilder over recent weeks, having inflated the expected losses from a first estimate of £50 million to an astonishing £400 million. But the actual outcome is expected to be nearer £80 million, which would still be a Lloyd's record and would leave a substantial shortfall on members' assets.

Deposits of the 400 syndicate members, amounting to about £50 million, would be first to be called on, leaving members to make good the rest. Such shortfall could range from £150,000 to around £750,000 a head, depending on the extent of personal involvement in the disastrous syndicates. That could leave even the wealthiest of them embarrassed.

But members are not accepting the fiasco quietly. Minet Holdings, which own the syndicate management, and Alexander Howden Group, which was also involved, offered to repay £27 million that had been drained out of the syndicate funds. Even then an investigation sponsored by members said another £40 million of lost interest should also be returned.

All the same, most of the members accepted the deal as probably the best they could get, considering the known high costs but uncertain outcome of litigation. Now they are to be told that in addition to money spirited away, incompetent underwriting has lost them huge additional sums.

Last August Minet expected one of the syndicates to show a small profit for 1982 and for others to report small losses for the three previous years being cleared up. How odd that they should have been so far out.

Keith Whitten, a member of the action group which has now set up an inquiry committee under Lord Goodman and sponsored an investigation by accountants Price Waterhouse, is sceptical until he gets a full explanation. "It is unwise to believe anything that has not been independently verified," he said.

That could be a motto for Lloyd's. Fraud over several years was borne with fortitude by members who were still left with handsome profits; to face massive trading losses as well is the last straw.

Gloomy view over jobs

THE industrial survey by the Confederation of British Industry on Tuesday pointed to a welcome pause in the steady decline of manufacturing employment, down by a quarter since recession hit in 1979.

But, if a new analysis by Dr Bill Robinson of the London Business School is correct, the chances of recovering those lost jobs look slim even if the economy were to grow more swiftly.

Dr Robinson argues that lack of demand cannot explain why manufacturing output and employment remain well below 1979 levels. National income and world trade are higher than they were then and industrial competitiveness is better.

Dr Robinson puts the blame on capacity constraints, pointing out ominously that the proportion of companies reporting below-capacity working to the CBI is nearly as low now as in 1979.

He estimates that £15 billion of uneconomic capacity has since been scrapped. To re-employ the 1·6 million whose jobs have been lost would entail £22·5 billion of new manufacturing capacity against the £5 billion or so invested last year.

"Until that capital is replaced, manufacturing output and employment will be supply constrained," Dr Robinson concludes.

His solution is to increase the demand for labour at existing levels of capacity by cheapening employment cost, preferably by cutting taxes on employment like the employers' National Insurance Contribution. This is at least as effective as taking people on directly in the public sector and more effective than income tax, according to the LBS economic model.

A cut in National Insurance contributions of £1 billion would be worth 120,000 jobs in three years' time, against 29,000 for an equivalent cut in income tax. Mr Lawson take note.

ITT plans to float stake in Abbey

AMERICAN conglomerate ITT yesterday confirmed that it is to float a minority take in its British life assurance, pensions and unit trust subidiary Abbey Life.

The sale in the first half of next month will be handled by merchant bank S G Warburg and brokers Rowe & Pitman and is expected to value Abbey at more than £500 million.

Between a quarter and a half of Abbey will be offered, raising between £125 million and £250 million for the United States parent, which is hoping to realise $1·7 billion from worldwide asset sales this year to strengthen its balance sheet.

Warburg began a study of the feasibility of floating Abbey on the Stock Exchange in January.

The introduction is likely to be a fixed price offer, but details are still being finalised.

UK urges end to protection for steelmakers

ABOLITION of the protection provided for Common Market steelmakers on the present target date of December was urged yesterday by the British Iron and Steel Consumers' Council.

The council, headed by Lord Ezra, complained that British steel customers had suffered from the production and price control system operated by the commission.

Steel delivery times were longer and prices higher than on the Continent because British Steel had been operating under tight production quotas. All British producers have had to pay or risk paying fines for exceeding their quotas, said the council.

Gold price takes $9·25 tumble

THE LONDON gold price closed $9·25 down at $311·75 an ounce yesterday in one of its sharpest falls for some time, though the extent of the drop was largely artificial and technical.

With the absence of Continental interest because of the May Day holiday trading was generally quiet. The metal was additionally undermined by the strength of the dollar.

Dealers said they were fairly relaxed as long as gold did not break below $310.

Wall St drops 16 points

By JAMES SRODES in Washington

LATE selling by major brokerage institutions yesterday sent Wall Street's share prices reeling for the worst loss this year. On the heels of a 17-point loss in the previous two sessions, the Dow Jones Industrial Average plunged another 16·01 to 1,242·05 in late trading.

Prices were mixed most of the day with the Dow Jones Industrial Average showing a marginal loss of 1·5 points at 1256·14 shortly before the close.

Confusion over the direction of interest rates and concern over heavy Treasury borrowing needs put a damper on trading activity.

As expected the United States Treasury late on Tuesday night announced it would sell $20 billion of government notes in its quarterly refunding. The Treasury sale will be the largest quarterly refunding ever

Successful debut for Biffex

THE world's first freight futures market, launched by Sir Alan Traill, Lord Mayor of London, on the Baltic Exchange yesterday, got off to a "satisfactory start" with 155 contracts traded.

Stephen Carter, chief executive of the Baltic International Freight Futures Exchange (Biffex), added that volume was much as expected given that May Day was a holiday throughout much of Europe.

Exchange to upstage Liffe

By JOHN RUDOFSKY

THE Stock Exchange yesterday unveiled plans for trading options in foreign currencies that will lead it into a head-on clash with the London International Financial Futures Exchange (Liffe), which is about to do the same thing.

When dealings start later this month it will also mark the first arrival of non-members on the trading floor of the Stock Exchange in its 184-year history, a full 18 months prior to the so-called "big bang" when all Stock Exchange practices change.

Detailing the plans, David Steen of jobbers Pinchin, Denny, chairman of the traded options committee, declared: "We have done something that changes the whole outlook of the Stock Exchange.

"We intend to grab business from outside. We are no longer a market place with a wall around it."

He was announcing the launch of the market's first foreign currency options. They are similar to options on individual stocks but based on currencies.

The first to be traded is a contract for £12,500 priced in dollars. Dummy trading runs start shortly and business should go live in the middle of the month.

The dollar-sterling contract will quickly be followed by a dollar-deutschemark contract.

First market-makers in the new contracts, who play a similar role to jobbers by always quoting buying and selling prices on contracts, are Standard Chartered Bank, Rudolf Wolff and the jobbers Smith Brothers.

Both Standard Chartered and Rudolf Wolff are already active in dollar-sterling currency options which are traded in America, Amsterdam and London in an ad hoc but rapidly growing over-the-counter market estimated to be worth £15 billion.

The race is on for the first non-member to strike a bargain on the Stock Exchange floor. It will be between Fred Lee, 29, senior dealer in currency options for Standard Chartered, and Jeremy Jardine-Patterson, 28, Rudolf Wolff's chief dealer.

Options give the right to buy or sell the currency, but not the obligation like futures contracts in the months ahead at a fixed price regardless of exchange rate movements. The The Stock Exchange plans three, six, nine and 12-month contracts with a choice of different fixed strike prices or exchange rates.

Liffe detailed proposals for almost identical contracts, but for a face value of £25,000, on the dollar-sterling contract due to start on June 27.

It is widely believed in the City that there is not enough potential business for two embryo markets to develop offering near-identical products.

The Bank of England has kept a watching brief on developments but is reluctant to come down for one exchange against the other.

The symbols of our success

Highlights from the Review of Activities and the Statement of the Chairman, Sir William Coats:

Turnover up 21%; profit up 26%; earnings per share up 35%; final dividend up 20%

The year 1984 has been a notable one for your company in that we have achieved £1,000 million of turnover and £100 million of profit before tax. When the year began we had been hopeful of reaching the latter but thought it unlikely that turnover would pass the billion pound mark.

The Board consider that the results justify an increase in the final dividend from 3.2p to 3.85p making a total increase for the year of 17%.

Product groups

The past year has seen a heightened general awareness of the extensive range of the group's manufacturing and trading interests and we also continue to benefit from the wide geographical spread of our activities.

Although traditional trades still feature strongly in the overall performance of the group, and will continue to do so, the product groups—leisure and craft products, retail shops/fashionwear, precision engineering and diecasting—account for over 50% of the group turnover and trading profit. Our policy is directed towards further development of these trades either through expansion or acquisition.

In pursuance of that policy we purchased during the year Aero Needles of Redditch, and Schachenmayr, Marin & Cie, a leading handknitting yarn manufacturer in West Germany. Both companies are performing well and with some reorganisation will become very profitable additions to the group.

Prospects

We look forward to 1985 with confidence, provided there are no violent swings in those exchange rates which are most important to us.

Mowlem record beats forecasts

JOHN MOWLEM'S pre-tax profits advanced last year by £1m to a new peak of £11·1m, a much better performance than observers were expecting. At the half-way point they were down to £700,000 and the group itself said the indications were it would be more difficult to make progress in profit terms.

The year saw a change in the relative contributions from the divisions. Mowlem Technology, where Buehler made good progress and E L E had a marked recovery, continued to grow. Property development, including the rationalisation of group property holdings, made a markedly increased contribution but construction's profits were below objectives though still showing a good return on assets.

Regional companies did well and international results were creditable, but the major British civil engineering business was affected by two projects which failed to meet group objectives. The group adds that it is likely that 1985 will see maintenance of the new relationship of profits and further progress is expected.

A 9·75p final on July 1 makes 11·85p (11·2p) from earnings of 28·7p (27p).

Nurdin & Peacock

FOLLOWING an improved performance for the 21st successive year, Nurdin & Peacock, the cash and carry wholesaler, is increasing the dividend to 4·2p (3·57p) with a 2·5p final on July 5. There is also a one-for-four scrip issue.

Pre-tax profits are up £1·16m to £15·2m, though earnings are unchanged at 15·8p due to the adverse effects of the 1984 Budget. A big factor in the year's outcome was the success of the group's "Red Band" cigarettes.

These were launched in July, within six weeks were Nurdin's best selling brand and, according to chairman Michael Peacock, have never looked back. Sales increased in the current year is running at an encouraging level.

Bellway

HALF-YEAR results from Newcastle housebuilder Bellway have slumped from £1·17m to just £620,000 pre-tax on turnover of £19·9m (£19·1m). Earnings are back from 4·2p to 2·4p but the interim dividend stays at 5p on July 5.

The group looks forward to increased sales in the North now the miners' strike has ended. The South-East market, according to chairman Kenneth Bell, did not suffer in the same way and has performed well.

Bellway (North London) has acquired several sites for residential development, but completion of the first units is not anticipated until the next financial year.

BAT

GOOD results from BAT Industries' 75 p.c.-owned Brazilian subsidiary yesterday helped the tobacco-based conglomerate to recover from a 1985 low of 500p to close at 520p. Pre-tax profits of Souza Cruz for the three months to March 31 jumped from cruzeiros 58·6bn to cruzeiros 188bn.

Geers Gross

ON TURNOVER of £122m against £97·9m, advertising group Geers Gross increased pre-tax profits from a depressed £1·25m to £1·82m in 1984. Earnings are 10·6p compared with 7·1p, and there is a 2p final dividend on July 12.

Significant progress was made by Geers Gross Advertising Inc. of New York, both in terms of margins and levels of activity following the combining of the group's United States operations into one agency unit. The New York agency now has billings in excess of $100m and is the 30th largest in the United States.

Jessups

JESSUPS, motor vehicle dealer and body builder, has followed a record 1983-84 — when profits rose from £901,000 to £1·15m — with an encouraging first half for the pre-tax outturn is up from £405,000 to £455,000. The board is confident of continuing the improvement and accordingly the interim dividend is being lifted from 1p to 1·25p on July 1 from earnings of 4·07p (4·85p).

Turnover was marginally ahead at £25·4m (£23·2m).

Leasing activities again achieved improved profit performance while the parts and service operations also did well.

The group continues to benefit from capital allowances on the lease fleet which will keep the tax charge low for the year ending August.

Marshall's Universal

MARSHALL'S Universal 1984 pre-tax outturn rose from £981,000 to £1·6m and — as foreshadowed — is resuming final dividends with 1·75p on July 22 for a 2p (nil) total.

Turnover of this vehicle distributor and paper merchant advanced from £32·5m to £64·4m. Earnings were 5·45p (2·09p).

The group says that after the sale of its East African interests it will be broadly based and trading entirely in Britain. Self-adhesive activities are the largest in Britain and it looks forward to a growing share of this market.

The industrial components businesses had a highly successful year and a "substantial" increase in profitability for this division is expected.

Marshall's is acquiring Road Signs-Franco from Wagon Industrial Holdings for £1·02m, satisfied by 1·71m Marshall shares and £12,800 cash. In 1983-84, Road Signs-Franco made £207,000 (£185,000) pre-tax.

London United

INSURANCE holding company London United Investments has had another record year with pre-tax profits ahead from £5·22m to £6·19m on the back of turnover of £40·8m against £24·6m.

Earnings come through at 27·16p, compared with 24·38p, and the dividend goes up 1p to 13p with an 8p final. The results included associates' contribution of £844,000 against £256,000 but were struck after group overheads £85,000 higher at £702,000.

Redpath Industries

SECOND - QUARTER pre - tax results from Tate & Lyle's major Canadian subsidiary, Redpath Industries, slipped from C$9·28m to C$8·78m, making the six months total C$18·9m (C$19m).

The latest quarter was hit by the five-week strike at Redpath Sugars and by the severe price competition in the North-Eastern United States. An improved industry environment is expected during the remainder of the year.

Shiloh Spinners

SHILOH, whose interests range from textile spinning to computer software, yesterday rebounded 36 to 80p in response to the strong profits recovery and full dividend restoration.

With the closing half producing £500,000 against just £17,900, the pre-tax surplus has jumped £291,000 to £417,000.

Earnings come out at 14·05p (3·89p) and a 1·25p final dividend on June 20 lifts the total to 2p (1·5p).

Further progress is seen during the coming year.

Spong Holdings

SPONG Holdings, the houseware products distributor which turned round from a £26,000 loss to a £71,500 profit at half-way, went on to make a further £198,500 in the second half to lift the full year pre-tax outturn from £36,000 to £273,000 and with earnings of 1·29p (0·28p) it is paying its first Ordinary dividend since 1978 with nominal 0·1p distribution for 1984.

The group is also paying the arrears due on the preference shares. The group started 1985 in a stong liquid position, helped December 1984, and two recent partly by the sale of Murell in acquisitions have strengthened its existing activities.

Proposing to change the year to end-April.

Souza Cruz

GOOD results from BAT Industries' 75 p.c.-owned Brazilian subsidiary yesterday helped the tobacco-based conglomerate to recover from a 1985 low of 500p to close at 520p. Pre-tax profits of Souza Cruz for the three months to March 31 jumped from 58·6bn Cruzeiros to 188bn Cruzeiros.

J. W. Spear

J. W. SPEAR & Sons, maker of a wide range of games including Scrabble and toy products, continued its recovery in the second half of last year. The interim £5,000 pre-tax profit has been followed by £858,000 (£239,000) for the full year.

With earnings up 7·87p to 11·03p dividend restoration goes on with a 4p payment on July 1 against 1p.

The group pushed sales up from £7·08m to £8·29m, winning back market share both in Britain and in all its major overseas markets, and chairman Francis Spear reports that the current order position indicates another improvement in trading results this year.

Ramco Oil

USM-quoted Ramco Oil Services reports pre-tax profits up from £847,000 to £910,000 and the acquisition of Inverness-based Thomson Welding and Inspection for £800,000.

Half the purchase price is satisfied by the issue of new shares.

Dividend for the year is 0·7p a share.

Rio Tinto–Zinc

RIO Tinto-Zinc's chairman, Sir Alistair Frame, says in his 1984 annual statement that world economic activity should expand this year, although not as rapidly as in 1984, and that the group's industrial interests may find it hard to maintain their pace of improvement. However some metal prices may rise.

Haden consortium engages Trafalgar

By RA TICKEL

THE battle for control of Haden, the engineering group, enters a crucial 48-hour period today when a consortium-backed management buy-out offer to rival the £37·2 million cash offer from Trafalgar House, is expected to be announced.

Schroders, the merchant bank advising Haden, yesterday confirmed discussions were taking place with a consortium company including Haden's senior management and a number of institutional investors including the Electra and Globe investment trusts, with a view to reaching agreement on an offer for the whole of the company.

The move is believed to be the first of its kind and with Schroders having put together the institutional backing, Charterhouse Japhet is being brought in to advise the consortium. Schroders will continue to advise Haden—or its independent directors.

The announcement coincided with Mr Tebbit, Trade and Industry Secretary, giving Trafalgar's 240p-a-share bid, dismissed as "unwelcome and opportunistic" by the Haden board, clearance to proceed.

Haden's share price has remained comfortably in excess of Trafalgar's offer throughout the bid and improved a further 20p to 331p yesterday following confirmation a rival bid was in the offing.

The Trafalgar House bid reaches its second closing date today and chairman Sir Nigel Broackes has until Friday at the very latest, to decide whether or not to increase his offer but Schroders' announcement suggests Haden chairman Peter Simonis and his team are serious about keeping the engineering group under their management.

Trafalgar House said last night they were "confused" by Schroders' statement and until clarification of the announcement was received, it was considering its position.

Nimslo optimistic as loss falls to $3·1m

By MICHAEL BECKET

NIMSLO International, the 3D camera company, made a pre-tax loss last year of $00 million and a net loss of $3·1 million (£2·5 million) and again had its accounts qualified, but the chairman James Davidson points out this was a big improvement on the $30.8 million net loss of 1983 and the loss was "less than reported for the six-month period ended June 30, 1984."

Losses accumulated in four years of activity have now topped $50 million and Mr Davidson is reluctant to forecast a profit for the current financial year. But he says this year will show "progress over 1984," and he is "encouraged by initial results."

The shares eased 2p to 34p yesterday which puts a value of £37 million on the company compared with the £250 million when it went on the unlisted securities market in November 1981. It was then developing a camera with four lenses to give a 3D effect in photographs, but Mr Davidson said "the amateur cameras have not been a big success" and production is now down to 25,000 a year.

Almost all of these are sold in the United States at between $35 and $65 and as soon as Nimslo has established what the market will pay, it will launch a new camera, but not till "mid-86 at the earliest." But manufacture has just started of a 35mm studio camera to sell at between $2,000 and $3,000.

Turnover last year rose 6·6 p.c. to $27·9 million (£22·9 million), almost all of it in America. The audit qualification concerns the $8·8 million (£7.2 million) worth of technical information and design in the accounts, but the auditors warn that "recovery of these intangible fixed assets is dependent upon adequate future profits arising from the exploration of the information and designs and the sales of cameras".

Mr Davidson said the policy was to write intangibles off over eight years, and $1·5 million was written off last year. The company's main revenues now come from a chain of photographic studios across the United States, which accounted for 94 p.c. of the revenue and last year provided $1·4 million profit.

But the company is persisting with its cameras and Mr Davidson said "I would hope the ship is fairly stable now."

MONEY & EXCHANGES

THE POUND fell sharply as the dollar scored widespread gains on exchange markets yesterday, with dealers pointing to the American government's hefty funding programme as a factor behind the dollar's advance.

Sterling closed 1·85 cents down at $1·2250 and its average international value fell by 0·4 to 77·7. The pound held up well against other major currencies, however.

The cost of period funds edged up in London as the wavering pound undermined sentiment in money markets. The three-month interbank rate held at 12⅝ p.c., but six-month money was dearer.

The Bank of England bought bills and entered into sale and repurchase arrangements with the discount houses to provide a cash injection of over £1 billion to the banking system.

WATERFORD HAVE RAISED THEIR GLASSES TO A RECORD IR £14.6 MILLION PROFIT

Waterford Glass Group plc are pleased to report that pre-tax profits at IR £14.6 million for the year ended 31st December 1984 were 43.7 per cent up on the previous year.

This increase was largely due to the greatly improved crystal and china operations. Particularly in overseas markets. A strong dollar also helped improve their position in the US where Waterford achieved record sales.

Improved liquidity also played an important part, with a reduction in borrowings of IR £9 million and lowering of the debt/equity ratio from 60 per cent to 47 per cent.

The accounts provide IR £2 million for extraordinary items. The amount covers closure costs and reorganisation expenses as well as a provision for deferred taxation due to legislative changes in the UK.

The total dividend for the year of 2.0p represents an increase of 20 per cent over 1983 and, with further improvements in Group liquidity expected in 1985 and a high level of demand for crystal and china being experienced in the US already this year, the future is viewed with considerable confidence.

WATERFORD GLASS GROUP plc

Waterford Crystal

Reversing the previous trend of rising inventories, Waterford Crystal has generated sales in excess of production, achieving profits of IR £11 million compared with IR £7 million in 1983. Sales reached their highest ever level in the US, where over 50 per cent of total output is distributed. UK sales increased by 30 per cent.

Aynsley China

Aynsley – manufacturer of fine bone china and distributor of Waterford Crystal in the UK – had a successful year with profits up from STG £2.4 million in 1984.

Switzer Group

Despite a fall-off in consumer spending and high VAT rates, the Switzer department stores group has achieved profits of just over IR £1 million.

Smith Group

The continuing decline in car sales in Ireland is reflected in the loss of IR £750,000 recorded by this group last year. But restructuring plans are well advanced and an improvement is anticipated during 1985.

John Hinde

Further development of the US market was the main improvement which led John Hinde to contribute a very satisfactory IR £500,000 to overall net profit.

Applying for shares in British Aerospace?

The Prospectus will be published in the national press* tomorrow.

THE QUESTOR COLUMN

Foseco's material advance

FOSECO Minsep's business of materials technology may not fill ordinary investors with immediate enthusiasm, but there can be no denying the group's progress in the year ended December nor its prospects.

In the 12 months to December 31 strong advances were made in its three main trading divisions and the fourth was only undone by the miners' strike. This checked profits by about £1 million, but business opportunities have already started to be recovered.

Group outcome at £54·5 million pre-tax against £20·6 million was well up to market expectations and the improved trend noted in the second half of last year has spilled over into most markets so far in 1985.

Foseco, with specialised products and services to the foundry, steel and other metallurgical industries, turned in trading profits of £22.8 million against £13.8 million. Fosroc, with its construction and timber treatment chemical interests, put on more than £1 million at £9.17 million and the rewards of earlier ground work saw Unicorn move from £4.9 million to £8.1 million.

A major foothold in the United States roofing products, coatings and adhesives markets comes from its $47.7 million acquisition of Gibson-Homans, through which Foseco gains 14 manufacturing units and outlets for its own products. The profit contribution from this deal will be slow but sure.

But for the cash acquisition gearing would have fallen from 27 to 13p.c. It now sits at 48p.c. but, given the benefit of a strong cashflow, will fall progressively this year.

Meanwhile, Foseco has ruled out any current need for a rights issue and, though trading conditions in the Middle East are depressed and other areas suffering from exchange rate fluctuations, further steady profits progress is in sight.

It would be wrong to look for the same rate of profits growth this year but a pre-tax outcome of £59 million should be within easy reach.

The shares, after a good performance recently, ran into profit-taking yesterday and closed 5p weaker at 227p. But on a prospective price-earnings ratio of 8·7 and despite scepticism about its steel connections — 25 p.c. of sales worldwide — the shares are undervalued.

Sit tight with Tricentrol

SPRING is in the air, and so are thoughts of love. But as far as Tricentrol is concerned marriage is the last thing it has in mind, even if Enterprise Oil does have a 4·9 p.c. stake.

Chairman James Longcroft did his best at yesterday's annual meeting to kill off takeover speculation. But it is chatter which will just not go away. And for this and for fundamental reasons investors should sit tight—even though it will be a long and at times dull ride.

First quarterly figures showing a net income of £7·9 million against £7·4 million do little to change the view of flat net income for 1985 and 1986 as well. But for those fully prepared to sit it out then there are more profitable years ahead.

James Longcroft, Tricentrol chairman—first quarter net income £7·9 million, against £7·4 million.

Proven established reserves suggest a sharp increase in production volumes in time, and thus a boost to profitability. The recently raised £45·2 million net via a convertible loan stock puts Tricentrol, for the moment at least, in a reasonable position to fund its development-exploration plans.

The immediate impact of the loan stock issue has been to reduce gearing from 70 p.c. at December 31 to 40 p.c., though the converse of its funding of the acquisition of a 7·5 p.c. stake in Wytch Farm and the impact of higher United Kingdom interest rates sees the net interest charge £1·4 million higher at £5·3 million.

Meanwhile, exploration continues apace, and in the Gulf of Mexico Tricentrol shares with its 8·34 p.c. stake in a gas discovery by Texaco, while in Australia the first of two appraisal wells on WA-191-P are due to start soon.

Net income of £30 million this year and next will make earnings unexciting in the short term, but the share price at 260p, up 15p, is well supported by estimated asset value.

Takeover talk will continue to give the odd flurry of excitement. The speculative element in this, as with others in its sector, should never be forgotten.

Law goes cold on Pergamon

THE "DELIGHT" reported at Solicitors' Law Stationery Society when Robert Maxwell's Pergamon Press seized control last week is apparently short lived.

Yesterday, Solicitors' Law said the offer of 35p a share "seriously undervalues the future prospects" of the company.

The statement was made by the board, apparently as a whole, yet the board includes a representative of the International Thomson Organisation. It was the Thomson interests which were sold to Maxwell.

Solicitors' Law says that it was aware of two recent approaches which might have led to an offer at a price in excess of that paid by Pergamon. If those approaches had any substance, it is curious indeed that the Thomson interests should have sold out at a lower price.

Yesterday's statement accepts, however, that the acquisition is a fait accompli, and that the only question that remains is whether shareholders should accept the cash or remain as a minority holder in either Solicitors' Law or another Maxwell company, Hollis Bros. ⅛ E.S.A. which is offering a share alternative.

There is still an outside chance that one or other of the two approaches—one of which is understood to have come from a management buyout proposal—might come up with an offer which would tempt the Maxwell camp to take a profit on the deal—but its a slim one.

Hope nevertheless dies hard. The Solicitors' Law price was a clear penny above the Pergamon offer last night, providing another escape route for shareholders caught in a confusing labyrinth.

Meanwhile, the spokesman who only last week was "delighted" is reconsidering his verdict.

Guinness to revamp 'Harp'

ARTHUR GUINNESS and its partners yesterday unveiled plans to revamp "Harp" Lager after its slide in less than ten years from top-spot to fifth position in the £2·5 billion a year lager market.

Greene King has a 25 p.c. stake in "Harp" and Guinness has 75 p.c. Courage, owned by the Imperial Group, and Scottish & Newcastle Breweries, both brew it under licence.

Now Carling, from Bass, tops the charts. "Carlsberg," "Heineken" and "Skol" are all ahead of "Harp", with "Foster's" coming up fast behind it.

It has taken a year of secret planning to prepare for the relaunch aimed at giving "Harp" a new image in its first big reorganisation in ten years. "This is the start of a new growth phase with our largest ever marketing spending," said Simon Mallalieu, franchise director for Harp.

Planet agrees bid by Heywood Williams

ALUMINIUM and glazing specialist Heywood Williams has emerged as the bidder for Planet Group, the doors and windows maker, with an agreed share exchange offer worth £11·2 million.

The terms, four Heywood shares for every five Planet Ordinary, are worth 112p-a-share with Heywood down 6p at 140p, and Planet returned from suspension to close 8p higher at 106p.

Lloyds Bank International, for Heywoods, is providing a 104p-a-share cash alternative by offering to acquire the new Heywood Ordinary at 130p each.

The Planet board is recommending the offer and, together with others, has undertaken to accept in respect of 50·5 p.c. of the shares, giving Heywood effective control of 52 p.c. of the equity.

Ralph Hinchliffe, chairman of Heywood, which has been pursuing a policy of investing in companies allied to its existing operations—it recently paid £7·3 million for safety glass maker City Glass Works (Liverpool)—saw Planet as further helping spread the group's interests away from the "sluggish" home improvements market, where it acts as a supplier to the trade.

Planet's commercial window business will complement Heywood's window manufacture and glazing contracting activities and provide opportunities for it to develop its aluminium and glass business

Planet's vehicle window business in the United States will also provide Heywood with a base from which to introduce its own products.

Heywood would emerge from the bid with a gearing of around 40 p.c., but was confident the enlarged group will see further progress in 1985 and forecast an interim dividend of not less than 2·42p (2·2p) on the enlarged capital.

Holiday Inns plans 26 new UK hotels

By DAVID GREEN

HOLIDAY INNS, the American hotel operator which has 1,700 properties worldwide, is planning to open 26 new hotels in Britain to add to the existing 17.

One of its most sought after sites is in the London docklands where it hopes to open two hotels, on condition that planning permission is given for the STOL airport.

The new hotels will have about 120 rooms each and at £40,000 per room this represents a £160 million development.

The group is also near to agreement with the Greater Manchester Council and Commercial Union for the purchase of a 49 p.c. stake in the Manchester Midland Hotel, once one of British Rail's chain of hotels. The cost of refurbishment is estimated at £12·4 million.

It is also planning to open hotels at Heathrow's Terminal 4 and at Manchester Airport. Among other British cities it has under active consideration for hotels are Edinburgh, Leeds, Swindon, Oxford, Bath, York, Southampton, Milton Keynes and Chester.

The plans for Britain are part of a widespread expansion into Europe. Sigi Bergmann, managing director for Europe, says the group plans to be operating in 140 locations on the Continent within the next ten years.

Because of the intense competition among hotel groups for key sites, Holiday Inns is increasingly favouring the refurbishment of existing buildings. One of the proposed hotels in the London docklands area would involve converting a warehouse built in 1804. The company is also negotiating for a Scottish church.

The group's expansion in Britain and Europe is not based solely on a projection of increased need for beds but a demand among business travellers, who account for around three-quarters of its customers, for a better standard of accommodation.

Pension fund assets £150bn

PENSION funds remain one of the most important forces in the financial markets, with estimated assets in excess of £150 billion and growing well ahead of inflation each year.

According to Alan Philipp, editor of PENSION FUNDS AND THEIR ADVISERS, fund managers are becoming less secretive about the sources of income and details of their assets.

The 1985 edition of the year book shows that of the assets of all pension funds the top 25, which includes those of most of the State-owned industries, account for more than a third of the total with assets valued at £51·7 billion.

It is clear that while the pension industry as a whole is indeed a major force in the City the top 25 funds have a disproportionate influence. These top funds are almost equally divided between the public and private sectors.

Despite the long miners' strike the National Coal Board funds are the largest with assets of £5·75 billion, but it appears that British Telecom with assets of £5·1 billion, up £1 billion in the past year, will soon overtake the coal funds.

PENSION FUNDS AND THEIR ADVISERS is published by A P Information Services.

Allied Textile attacks London Midland offer

ALLIED TEXTILE chairman Russell Smith yesterday fired off a strongly-worded attack against mini-conglomerate London Midland Industrials which is making a share swap bid worth £43 million at yesterday's prices.

"The directors see no reason why A T C's shareholders should exchange shares in their successful textile business, which is prudently managed and has excellent prospects, for shares in an industrial holding company without commercial direction and without the responsible financial management of A T C", declared Mr Smith.

The board has decided to hold fire on a profits forecast at this stage of the bid but promises to increase this year's interim dividend "substantially".

The terms were worth almost 476p a share yesterday, against a market price 5p higher at 485p.

Dr Leach joins Vickers as MD

DR RODNEY LEACH, 55, who quit the P & O board in a major shake-up in March, is today appointed managing director of the Vickers shipbuilding and engineering business of British Shipbuilders.

The yard builds nuclear submarines, with £200 million of new investment in progress and with plans being prepared for denationalisation.

Dr Leach was a nuclear physicist and a partner in the McKinsey management consultancy before joining P & O. He led the building of the £125 million Royal Princess cruise liner for P & O.

THE Cash and Carry WHOLESALERS

"... another record year"

W. M. Peacock, Chairman

Increased profits and dividends growth maintained

Statement by the Chairman

During 1984 sales increased from £516.4m to £596.1m. Profits before taxation of £12m increased to £13.16m. Profits of £8.2m after taxation are virtually unchanged due to the adverse effects of the 1984 Budget.

Your Directors are recommending a final dividend of 2.5p per share. This, together with the interim dividend of 1.7p per share already paid, makes a total for the year of 4.2p per share and compares with 3.57p per share for 1983. I have waived the dividend on my own shareholding. Your Directors are also recommending a scrip issue of one ordinary 10p share for every four held.

This year we are celebrating a Double Jubilee – 175 years of trading and 25 years since the start of our Cash and Carry operation which makes up by far the larger part of our Business and which has gone ahead without a break for each of those 25 years. It gives me particular pleasure therefore to report another record year.

The increase has been achieved against the now normal background of fierce competition in our Trade, stiffened last year by the efforts of two competitors who were trying to secure a rapid increase in market share to strengthen their respective positions, in a bid by one to take over the other. Against this background our results reflect great credit on our Staff and I should like to pay a special tribute to them and express my thanks to them all.

A big factor in the outcome of the year has been the success of our 'Red Band' cigarettes. These were launched in July, within six weeks were our best selling brand, and have never looked back. Cigarette manufacturers have for some time been favouring the multiple retailers and encouraging them to promote their brands on price alone, and I believe the launch and success of our exclusive label – and others – is a natural outcome of this policy. The same thing has happened in other fields, especially Wines and Spirits and these exclusive labels, together with our 'Peacock' range, are all being very well accepted by our customers and the consumer alike.

The current year sees considerable activity in connection with our Double Jubilee, with a token gift scheme for our customers which is proving very popular. A great deal of hard work has gone into planning it and is continuing throughout the Company, and here again I should like to thank all who have been and are involved, especially the many manufacturers who have supported us.

We have stepped up training within the Company and this is being tackled mainly by our own Staff with great enthusiasm and is being greeted with equal enthusiasm by those attending the courses. Obviously, this is costly but we are sure the benefits will more than compensate.

Gloucester Branch will be open by the time this Report is published and certainly the canvassing we have done augurs well for the future. Building work is progressing well on the 35,000 sq. ft. extension to our Watford Branch, doubling its present size, and the conversion of a 73,000 sq. ft. building, to replace our existing small Branch at Colchester is well under way. Both should be operational later this year. Work has also started on a new Branch of 92,000 sq. ft. at Wolverhampton to be opened in 1986.

As always, it is impossible to predict the profit outcome for the year, but the sales increase is running at an encouraging level and it will be disappointing if we cannot show improved profits again. Certainly everyone is working hard to that end and I am very pleased that, following this year's allocation, more of our Staff will have a bigger stake in the Company in the form of shares.

London and Manchester Group plc

Extracts from the statement by the Chairman, Mr H L K Browne, F.C.A., on the Group Report and Accounts for 1984

I referred in my statement last year to the likely effects of the withdrawal of Life Assurance Premium Relief (LAPR) from new business and the intention to introduce newly designed contracts to meet clients' needs in the changed circumstances. While the loss of LAPR has undoubtedly had some effect on new business figures, particularly in the industrial branch, the overall results for 1984 now before you reflect, I believe, a very satisfactory response to a challenging year.

Consolidated Profit and Loss Account and Dividend

Income has been received from London and Manchester Assurance by transfers of £4,011,000 from the main life funds and £1,350,000 from the investment trust retirement annuity fund. The transfer from the main life funds includes a first contribution of £100,000 from surplus emerging within the segregated fund of mainly linked life business introduced through the life broker division.

The general branch loss after tax amounted to £488,000.

The consolidated profit and loss account also includes the Group's share of the profit of the new associated company, London and Manchester (Mortgages) Limited of £277,000 and, for the first time, a transfer from the long term fund of London and Manchester (Pensions) Limited, amounting to £175,000.

Investment income for the year fell by £99,000 to £1,058,000 following the transfer of invested assets from the shareholders' funds arising out of the purchase of London and Manchester (Pensions) Limited by the holding company on 31 December 1983.

After setting off the expenses of management and taxation there remains a balance of £5,791,000 which has enabled your Board to recommend a final dividend of 14.00p per share (1983 11.48p). This, together with the interim dividend of 5.81p per share paid in November 1984, makes a total of 19.81p per share (1983 16.45p). After providing for these dividends the balance carried forward has been increased by £1,249,000.

Bonuses

The normal reversionary bonus in the ordinary branch has been maintained at £5.75 per cent of the sum assured while industrial branch bonuses have been improved.

A further step has been taken this year in the development of the complete bonus system by declaring additional reversionary bonuses of £1.50 per cent in the ordinary branch and £2 per cent in the industrial branch on reversionary bonuses already declared. The cost of this declaration has been met by the transfer from investments revaluation reserve of £1.25 million to each branch. In addition increased transfers of £4.5 million to the ordinary branch and £3.8 million to the industrial branch have been made to provide for terminal bonuses.

The Insurance Market

The Government's White Paper on self-regulation within the financial sector which was published on 29 January 1985 is likely to have significant consequences for the life assurance industry. Last year I commented on your Board's view of the Registry of Life Assurance Commissions (ROLAC). Nothing has changed that view and, accordingly, representations have been made on the proposals in the White Paper for the treatment of commissions. It is your Board's opinion that the competitiveness of products and market forces provide a more effective protection for the investor than rules concerning the disclosure or limitation of commissions, mechanisms which can so easily fail to achieve their objectives in such a complex market place.

During the year work proceeded on the creation of an Association of British Insurers (ABI) with the intention of unifying the various associations which currently represent insurance companies. Your Board has viewed this development with some concern for it has always considered the Industrial Life Offices Association (ILOA) as particularly effective in representing the home service industry. There is some danger that the larger ABI may be less responsive to the needs of the home service offices and your Board will seek to ensure that under the new structure the interests promoted by the ILOA are actively pursued.

Home Service Division

The year has been one of intense product development in a sector of the market which has often seen the Group introduce innovative products. Moneyspinner, introduced in June 1984, is a regular premium contract which offers enhanced investment returns for those aged 50 and over. The Preferred Portfolio Plan provides a choice of investment funds and has already proved popular with those clients who have lump sums to invest. Other contracts which were introduced during 1984 included a savings plan for the young investor and a personal retirement contract for the self-employed offering long-term flexibility. The latter, known as The Independent Pension Plan, has achieved excellent results to date.

The prospects for 1985 are already very encouraging with a successful start to the annual sales competition and the increasing effect of the new product range.

Life Broker Division

In 1984, new annual premiums increased by 27 per cent and single premiums, at over £20 million, were up by 41 per cent. In addition much has been done to expand the range of intermediaries who support the division.

The unit-linked Investment Mortgage Plan proved to be the success of the year whilst High Five was one of the first plans to be launched specifically to provide maximum investment over the shorter term. In addition, two new retirement plans, one for the self-employed and the other for the executive director, were introduced. These Individual Retirement Plans have considerably enhanced the division's competitive position in this sector of the market place.

In 1985, a most significant new development has been the recent launch of Lifespan, a contract which offers a wide range of benefits and flexible premiums in order to cope with life's changing needs.

Pensions Division

The political environment in which the division operates has been the subject of far more speculation than in recent years and in this climate the division has been well served by the ability of many of its existing contracts to meet the changing needs and obligations of employers. To this range the Total Pension Plan was added during the year. The plan is a unique money purchase scheme which meets the needs of both large and small employers by incorporating a wide range of options. The market received the plan in a very positive manner and it completes a range of products which your Board considers to be highly competitive.

In terms of new business, money purchase contracts showed a strong increase in 1984 although total new annual premiums were only 4 per cent up on the previous year. Single premiums were 54 per cent higher than in 1983 at over £12 million and in this respect it was particularly pleasing to see Transplan ahead of target.

During 1985 marketing of the Managed Fund contract will take a greater prominence and this should be helped by the excellent investment performance which has been recorded since its launch.

General Branch

The introduction of revised contracts and more flexible means of payment have brought their rewards in terms of new business. New annual premiums of just over £1.5 million contributed towards a 21 per cent increase in total premium income for the year to £8.5 million.

Hospital Cash Provider Plan, introduced last autumn, is unique within the home service industry. For a modest weekly premium it provides financial assistance in the event of the policyholder or a member of his family entering hospital. To date sales have been ahead of plan and the contract has been very useful in attracting new clients.

Investments

During the year, the main life funds made net investments of £37.4 million in gilts and other fixed interest securities, £5.8 million in property and only £1.6 million overseas. A total of £24.9 million was disinvested from UK equities.

Corporate activity in investment trusts continued at a high level during the year. The Group benefited from the acquisition of Anglo Scottish by Japan Assets, and of Bishopsgate, London Prudential and Oil & Associated by companies outside the sector. However, the highlight of the year was the successful bid by London and Manchester Assurance for The Nineteen Twenty-Eight Investment Trust plc (1928). Group companies now hold 50.2 per cent of the company with the balance in the hands of individuals and other institutions. Mr Martin Harris has been appointed Chairman and the other directors are Mr David Rowe-Ham and Mr Andrew Withey, with Mr Ian Henderson and Lord Wakehurst nominated by London and Manchester. A new investment policy has been implemented and 1928 now holds a portfolio consisting primarily of investment trust shares. The takeover of 1928 is consistent with the Group's long term interest in investment trusts where total holdings now exceed £230 million.

Mortgages

In my statement last year I referred to the establishment of an associated company, London and Manchester (Mortgages) Limited, with the objective of advancing money at variable rates of interest with funds supplied by a commercial bank. Such was the success of this operation in 1984 that it became necessary to secure further funds substantially in excess of those originally envisaged. In January of this year there was finalised a transaction whereby £200 million was made available by way of a syndicated loan arranged by a leading merchant bank. Your Board believes that this move has laid the foundations of a business which will produce substantial life and general business for London and Manchester Assurance as well as being profitable in its own right. In its first year of operation the mortgage company has made a satisfactory contribution to Group profit.

Unit Trusts

Last year I referred to the creation of the Group's first unit trust, London and Manchester General Trust. In December 1984 two more unit trusts, the Income and International Trusts, were launched. Total funds under management now exceed £18 million with a substantial holding being attributable to the policyholders' funds.

Investment Management Services

The acquisition of a controlling interest in 1928 led the Group to establish London and Manchester (Asset Management) Limited, for the provision of investment management and associated services. Drawing on existing resources within the Group the new company successfully took over the full range of services required by the investment trust company and led the Group into a new area of activity.

Concluding Comments

It has been my practice since I became Chairman to commence my annual statement with a word of appreciation to the management and staff. I shall be retiring at the conclusion of the Annual General Meeting and I feel that on this occasion such expressions would be more appropriate at the end of my report. I wish therefore to record my very sincere thanks to the management and staff, both at Chief Office and in the field, for their support, co-operation and friendship not only during 1984 but throughout the period that I have had the honour and pleasure of serving the Group.

My colleagues on the Board have been particularly encouraging and understanding and I am most grateful to them for their support and advice. I am delighted that they have appointed Mr John Thomson to succeed me. Mr Thomson has been a director since 1974 and a Deputy Chairman for the past two years. He brings with him not only a wealth of commercial experience but also a strong commitment to the expansion of the Group and I wish him every success in his new responsibility.

The Annual General Meeting will be held on 23 May 1985. Copies of the Report, which includes the full text of the Chairman's Statement, may be obtained from the Deputy Secretary at Imperial House, Dominion Street, London EC2M 2SP.

Campbell Soup on takeover trail

CAMPBELL SOUP is stepping up its search for acquisitions in Britain and the rest of Europe, said William Cashel, chairman, in London yesterday.

The United States food group is in the takeover market as part of its policy to increase international sales from 15 p.c. to 25 p.c. of its total business.

The British subsidiary, with sales of around £45 million a year, has been running the rule over a number of companies but has so far failed to meet the parent's demanding criteria.

CORINNE DIBNAH who, like Greg Norman, is another protégé of the Australian coach Charlie Earp, set a strong pace in the Ford Women's Classic at Woburn yesterday when she had a first round of 70 for a three-stroke lead.

This was five under the fairly generous par of 75, though only five players scored inside it including Gillian Stewart, the triple Scottish amateur champion who shares second place with Kitrina Douglas, the holder, on 73.

Miss Dibnah, 22, and a former Australian amateur champion, is on her second visit to this country. Last year she played in four of the W P G A tournaments and won £800.

This year, with her elder brother as caddie and living out of a Dormobile, she has of necessity, loftier financial ambitions but long hours of tuition from Earp at Royal Queensland, interspersed with chores in "the shop" have had a quick reward.

Altogether the Australian had eight birdies in a temperature that could hardly have reminded her of home and quite the most impressive part of it was her inward half. This she covered in 34, five under the par of 39.

A patchy outward half of 36 that included three bogeys changed very much for the better with birdies at the 10th, 11th and 15th—which is normally the "end of the road" on this course for the women.

Long putts

But Miss Dibnah still had two more birdies up her sleeve, hitting a remarkable three-iron, low and with fade, from the midst of some trees, close to the flag at the 15th, and then a four-iron to 20ft at the 17th from where she sank not the first of several long putts.

If this was all very impressive so too was Miss Stewart's first appearance on the professional circuit. Her outstanding records as an amateur has led to a good deal of expectation and she certainly came up to scratch.

Indeed Miss Stewart could hardly have had a better start with an outward half of 35 and later four-under-par with three to play before two shots slipped away with fives at both the 16th and 18th.

For nine holes she did not put a foot wrong, other than an awkward second putt here and there, and she has worked so hard on her game at Sotogrande in Spain—some eight hours a day for five weeks — that her swing is already in tune.

Three poor tee-shots cost her strokes at the 11th, 16th and 18th but the length of others was underlined by her needing only seven and eight-irons at the 13th and 15th, both par fives.

Miss Douglas, one of the Scottish international's two partners, also had a 73 that was another model of her usual consistency. She had three birdies and only one bogey—the result of three putts from not very far at the fourth.

Lee Smith back

Jenny Lee Smith had a 74 in her first competitive round of golf for five months, falling back into the groove as if she had never been away while Dale Reid, the leading money-winner last year, was one of those on 75, level par.

Miss Reid was runner-up in the British Open on the same course last October but she confessed to being very lacking in motivation and at one point during the winter had been on the point of giving up the game.

The death of her father, who had introduced her to the sport late last year, may have had something to do with this lost incentive but her mother and elder sister have encouraged—if not bullied—her into continuing and but for a double bogey and a bogey in the last three holes she would have been even better placed.

1st rd leaders: 70—C. Dibnah (Australia).
73—G. Stewart, K. Douglas.
74—J. Lee Smith, E. New.
75—C. Panton, D. Reid, R. Comstock (US), Y. Morita.

78—B. Bible, J. Forrest, C. Sharp, C. Friend (US), C. Langford, M. Thomson, M. McDougall (US), A. Sjoholm (Finland), P. Grice.
79—J. Bonner (US), J. Smurthwaite, D. Hednicks (US), K. Lunn (Australia).

Dale Reid . . . almost gave up during the winter.

Ballesteros seeks next title in Europe

By RICHARD JAMES in Milan

SEVERIANO BALLESTEROS' ambition to become Europe's champion of champions is behind his surprise appearance in the £87,000 Italian Open which begins at Molinetto on the outskirts of Milan today.

The Spanish star, who has won around £135,000 on the American circuit in four months, has opted to play in Italy instead of entering the £325,000 Tournament of Champions in California.

So he has to beat more than 140 players instead of fewer than 40 to get his hands on a modest £14,500 first prize, and on a course whose immaturity looks like presenting all kinds of headaches.

The explanation, apart from the usual generous financial inducements, lies in Ballesteros' unquenchable thirst for European Open titles. He has won eight of them and wants the other two — three if you count the European Open itself.

No jetlag yet

Already in the bag are the British, French, Dutch, Swiss, Scandinavian, German, Spanish and Irish crowns. The Italian and Portuguese are the two he has yet to claim.

Ballesteros, who picked up around £25,000 for winning only one hole in a televised "skins" match in Sydney last week against Jack Nicklaus, Tom Watson and the winner Greg Norman — four skins and some £120,000 — made a 34-hour journey back to Europe.

He stopped off in America to see his girlfriend, who is at college in Boston, yet within an hour of touching down at nearby Linate Airport was playing 18 holes and insists: "I don't feel any jetlag—yet."

He philosophically accepts that the setting for his latest title attempt is a far cry from the manicured lawns of Augusta but points out: "In Europe things are different—you must adjust."

Tough opposition

Also having to adjust on their 1985 European debuts in Milan are Britons Sandy Lyle, the defending champion, and Nick Faldo, both of whom have earned a little under £40,000 on the American tour.

Faldo has returned in similar circumstances in past years to triumph in Europe, but Lyle admits to having "lost a little concentration" after playing 12 U.S. events in the past 13 weeks.

The three stars face tough opposition from in-form Europeans such as Manuel Pinero, of Spain, the winner in Madrid on Sunday, and Britain's Sam Torrance, who finished a single stroke short of a play-off with him and Josemaria Canizares.

Thornhill is supreme

By ELIZABETH PRICE

JILL THORNHILL, winner in 1963 and 1964, won the South Eastern Championship, sponsored by Moben Kitchens, for the third time at Temple with 148, two over par.

Two young players tied on 151. Susan Moorcroft (Thorndon Park), with an afternoon round of 74, took second place from Allyson Saunders (Stoneham), who had a 77.

Mrs Thornhill had an uneventful morning round with 16 pars, one one over par and a birdie. Her putting was good throughout the day and she three-putted only once, at the fourth in the afternoon.

Good short pitches

Starting at the 15th she chipped in at the 16th to go one under for the day. Four pars followed and then she lost her touch and dropped three shots in three holes, but at the last she again nearly holed her chip.

Her short pitches were good but from 60 yards she was not too accurate and her driving left a little to be desired.

"But I can see a light at the end of the tunnel and hope to get it right for the English in three weeks' time. I have been concentrating on my putting and it has paid off."

Golf is a game of what might have been and Miss Moorcraft could have won had she putted better or if she had not dropped two shots in the last three holes.

Miss Saunders could have done better, too, but dropped shots at the beginning of the afternoon five in the first four holes, then completed the round in par.

146—Mrs J. Thornhill (Walton Heath) 73, 75.
151—S. Moorcroft (Thorndon Pk) 77, 74; A. Saunders (Stoneham) 74, 77.

155—Mrs S. Barber (Thorndon Pk) 82, 73; N. McCormack (Porters Pk) 79, 76; Mrs W. Wooldridge (Wentworth) 78, 77.

ALLGARDH SHOCK FOR YOUL

By BILL EDWARDS

SIMON YOUL'S hold on the L T A spring lawn tennis circuit received a severe setback at Sutton yesterday. He suffered his first defeat of the three weeks when he was beaten 6-3, 7-6 by Christer Allgardh, 17, of West Germany.

The Australian, winner of the first two tournaments, at the Cumberland and Queen's Clubs, West Kensington, started badly, losing the first four games, and never got into the swing of things.

He had the chance to get out of trouble with two points for the second set, but both were missed and he lost out on a 10-points tie break.

Remarkably the match lasted two hours 11 minutes, having several dence games as well as many long rallies. It is the first time in the series that Allgardh has progressed beyond the second round.

More consistent

The result enhanced the prospects of Jeremy Bates, who played with greater confidence to dismiss Marco Bellini, of Italy, 6-2, 6-2. There were slight lapses of concentration but in the main he was more consistent, particularly with his well-placed ground shots.

He is now concerned with today's quarter-final with Mark Kratzman, of Australia, who was hard-pressed to beat Leighton Alfred, of Wales, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2.

Kratzman, world junior champion, looked in real trouble when Alfred led by a set and 4-2 only to become too tight and lose much of his earlier efficiency. Kratzman was content to play the match from the baseline.

Robin Drysdale, 32, by far the oldest competitor, beat Peter Johnston of Australia, 6-3, 6-4, while Michael Walker, a qualifier from Wales, reached the last eight with a 6-4, 6-3 win over Mark Blincow.

MEN'S SINGLES.—1st Rd.: M. Barsch (Australia) bt C. Emery (Surrey) 6-4, 4-6, 9-7. 2nd Rd.: C. Allgardh (Sweden) bt S. Youl (Australia) 6-3, 7-6; M. Walker (Wales) bt M. # Jarryd defeated by qualifier

By JOHN PARSONS in Hamburg

ROBERTO ARGUELLO, 21, a qualifier from the Argentine, ruined what was expected to be a record-breaking day for Swedish tennis at the West German Open in Hamburg yesterday by upsetting third seeded Anders Jarryd.

With Mats Wilander, Henrik Sundstrom, Joakin Nystrom and Jan Gunnarsson, already through, a win for Jarryd would have meant five Swedish players in the last 16 of a Super Series tournament for the first time.

In his first outdoor match on European clap since he won in Hilversum last July, Jarryd, now sixth in the world, compared with his opponent's modest 115th placing, clearly lacked inspiration and, one suspects, interest once he had lost the first set on a tiebreak and he was beaten 7-6, 6-2.

Arguello, an interesting character who serves left-handed, hits doubled-handed ground strokes on both flanks and employs a great deal of slice and spin, took full advantage of the chances he was offered by Jarryd, who kept his track suit trousers on throughout.

Weather problem

Both top-seeded Wilander and fourth-seeded Nystrom found it difficult in the early stages of their matches in chilly, windy and occasionally damp weather, to come to terms with conditions which sorely challenged their patience and concentration.

Wilander trailed Switzerland's Czechoslovakian exile, Jakob Hlasek, 3-5. "I have big trouble with the wind: it was really upsetting," he said, although he then rallied impressively by taking 15 of the next 16 points to transform the match.

Nystrom comes from one of Sweden's most northerly towns, not too far from the Arctic Circle, but even he said he had never played in such cold as well as windswept conditions as those which prevailed during his 4-6, 6-3, 6-3 victory over Peru's Pablo Arraya.

Cheeky shots

Arraya scored well in the opening set with cheeky shots, which fitted his renowned personality, but a spate of loose backhands at the start of the second et helped Nystrom, still glowing fro mhis Dallas victory over John McEnroe, to recover.

SECOND ROUND

M. Wilander (Sweden) bt J. Hlasek (Switzerland) 7-5, 6-1; A. Gomez (Ecuador) bt M. Ostoja (Yugoslavia) 6-2, 6-3; J. Nystrom (Sweden) bt P. Arraya (Peru) 4-6, 6-3, 6-3; M. Mecir (Czechoslovak) bt S. Glickstein (Israel) 6-1, 6-2; J. Gunnarsson (Sweden) bt S. Birner (Czechoslovak) 6-3, 6-3; H. Sundstrom (Sweden) bt S. Simonsson (Sweden) 4-6, 6-3, 6-2; G. Vilas (Argentina) bt T. Nijn (Australia) 6-2, 4-6, 6-1; F. Luna (Spain) bt C. Lewis (New Zealand) 6-0, 6-0; R. Arguello (Argentina) bt A. Jarryd (Sweden) 7-6, 6-2.

Mike Sangster in his playing days.

Mike Sangster dies at 44

By LANCE TINGAY

The death of Mike Sangster at the age of 44 has shocked the lawn tennis world. Among men he was the most effective British player of post-war years.

He built the game on a very fast, heavy service and every player in the world dreaded it. I remember Rod Laver retreating to the stop netting in his attempts to time it at Forest Hills, New York.

It was in 1961, his finest year, when he reached the last four both at Wimbledon and in the U.S. Nationals. He was also a semi-finalist in the French championships in 1965.

In the same year his muscle helped the British Davis Cup side win the European zone with a memorable victory against Sweden at Wimbledon and Sangster had taken 11 consecutive Davis Cup rubbers in four ties.

In eight seasons he played 65 rubbers in 26 ties, more than any British man. He won 43, a total surpassed in Britain only by Fred Perry.

He was something of a loner but with his upright figure, quiet and forceful personality, he gave British lawn tennis an impressive image. He chose the game after abandoning the claims of soccer, having debated about joining Torquay United as an apprentice.

On retirement he became prominent in Devon as a sports goods retailer. Sport was Sangster's life and if he had to have so untimely a death, the golf course was not an inappropriate setting.

FURTHER ANNOUNCEMENTS APPEAR TODAY ON PAGES 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 & 15

Walter Swinburn leaves the Jockey Club yesterday.

Swinburn's ban lets in Piggott

RIDING plans for Saturday's General Accident 2,000 Guineas have taken a round of musical chairs involving Lester Piggott, Willie Carson, Shadeed and Bairn following a 21-day suspension for Shadeed's intended jockey Walter Swinburn, writes Hotspur.

Piggott, who transferred allegiance from last season's top two-year-old Kala Dancer to Bairn 12 days ago, has now switched again to the odds-on Shadeed.

Bairn, second favourite since Piggott rode him to an impressive Greenham Stakes win at Newbury, has become Willie Carson's mount.

Local Suitor's disappointing reappearance race against Shadeed made John Dunlop hopeful that Carson would be free to ride Elisio. Dunlop is now seeking another jockey.

The Jockey Club disciplinary stewards gave Swinburn a 21-day suspension after the Epsom stewards had reported him for reckless riding on Lord Grundy last Wednesday.

Severe sentence

Swinburn's suspension is effective from this morning until May 25. The racing professionals with whom I have discussed his case all agree with me that the sentence seems very severe.

Not only will Swinburn forgo good chances of winning the Guineas classics on Shadeed and Dafayna, but he will also miss major meetings at Chester, Lingfield, York and Newbury.

Since his two infringements for over-zealous riding in the summer of 1981, Swinburn's record has been good and he is not the first jockey who has landed in trouble on the difficult Epsom course.

Swinburn's case yesterday took an hour and threequarters. The disciplinary stewards, sitting again, fined Henry Cecil £2,000 under a breach of rules that involved the terms of Lester Piggott's riding agreement when he was Cecil's first jockey.

The disciplinary stewards, headed by Sir William Dugdale, considered these terms had not been fully disclosed to the authorities, but Cecil's fine was below the £3,000 maximum.

●Walter Swinburn later abandoned an attempt in the High Court to challenge the ban, on the grounds that the stewards failed to give reasons for their decision and that this was contrary to the rules of natural justice.

His application was adjourned and then withdrawn after Mr Justice Kennedy had indicated that he did not think it stood much chance of success.

OH SO SHARP IS NAPPED FOR 1,000 GUINEAS

By HOTSPUR (Peter Scott)

STEVE CAUTHEN has made a flying start to his first season as stable jockey for Henry Cecil. Oh So Sharp, who carries their hopes in today's General Accident 1,000 Guineas, can retain her unbeaten record against a strong international field.

Oh So Sharp gained important two-year-old victories in the Solario Stakes and Hoover Fillies' Mile. Reappearing in Newmarket's Nell Gwyn Stakes a fortnight ago, she defeated another leading 1,000 Guineas hope Bella Colora by a length.

The Nell Gwyn Stakes has proved an especially good trial in recent years, attracting four of the last six 1,000 Guineas winners.

Fairy Footsteps and One in a Million, two of them, were trained by Cecil who expressed full satisfaction with Oh So Sharp's Nell Gwyn performance.

Some of the filly's admirers had hoped for a more spectacular display, but Cecil and Cauthen both maintained that Oh So Sharp ran lazily and could have found plenty more.

Bella Colora, in any case, is no mean opponent, having won the Waterford Candelabra Stakes at Goodwood last August. She and the unbeaten Dafayna provide a strong double challenge from Michael Stoute's stable.

Dafayna has not yet encountered top-class opposition but I was impressed by the way she overcame difficulties to win the Salisbury 1,000 Guineas Trial Stakes last month.

Walter Swinburn, with the choice of mounts, would have ridden Dafayna but for his suspension.

Lester Piggott, booked last month for Bella Colora, has not changed rides in this instance. Greville Starkey, Dafayna's replacement jockey, won the 1978 Oaks and Irish Oaks for Stoute on Fair Salinia.

Soft going preference

Oh So Sharp (nap) is well suited by dry ground but Triptych and Antartica, two of the leading overseas hopes, have shown their best form on soft going.

Triptych was French-trained when she won the valuable Prix Marcel Boussac at Longchamp last October. She was transferred to David O'Brien's Tipperary stable two months later and won her reappearance race at Phoenix Park.

Triptych, with Saturday's 2,000 Guineas and the following day's French 1,000 Guineas as alternatives, was not finally committed to a 1,000 Guineas challenge until yesterday.

Aviance, her stable-companion, has long been an intended 1,000 Guineas runner. This fast filly has not run since August. O'Brien considered the adverse spring weather could have meant that she took more harm than benefit from an early-season trial.

Vilikaia, the second French challenger, beat her compatriot Antartica by a neck at Maisons Laffitte last month, but that race was slowly-run and Antartica proved much superior last autumn.

Al Bahathri's recent Newbury defeat by Top Socialite was a little disappointing even granted that luck went against her. Top Socialite is reckoned inferior to Dafayna and Bella Colora who could fill the places behind Oh So Sharp.

Esquire looks the pick of several Derby entries in the Heathorn Stakes. He has the measure of Slip Anchor and Gay Captain on their running against Les Arcs at Newmarket two weeks ago.

TRYPTYCH IS BEST OF THE DAY

By Our Course Correspondent

TRIPTYCH*, rated the top two-year-old filly in Europe last season, can confirm that position in the General Accident 1,000 Guineas (3.40) at Newmarket today.

She ended 1984 with a four-length victory over Silvermine at Longchamp, and then joined the Derby-winning stable of David O'Brien in Ireland.

Triptych reappeared at Phoenix Park 12 days ago, and at long odds-on won more easily than the threequarter-length margin over Burning Issue might indicate. Unbeaten Oh So Sharp and Bella Colora may follow her home.

Henry Cecil, who trains Oh So Sharp, may be successful with Slip Anchor in the Heathorn Stakes (3.0). Slip Anchor is fancied to reverse a neck defeat by Esquire here recently, on 2lb better terms.

Nicoridge, who made late headway to take fourth place on his seasonal debut, may be better suited by today's longer trip in the Hastings Maiden Stakes (2.30), and the lightly raced Brig Chop is preferred to Fun Galore in the Bretby Handicap (4.15).

Brig Chop showed steady improvement throughout last season. He completed his campaign with a clever neck victory at Kempton Park over five furlongs.

STATE OF GOING

Advance official going for tomorrow's meetings. Newmarket: "good to firm"; Carlisle: "good to soft"; Plumpton: "firm"; Taunton: "hard."

HOTSPUR'S "TWELVE"

None of the horses listed in Hotspur's Twelve to Follow (Flat and NH) is engaged today.

Oh So Sharp (Steve Cauthen). Hotspur's nap for today's General Accident 1,000 Guineas.

Longboat is spur for Hern

By MARLBOROUGH (John Oaksey)

THE Mono Sagaro Stakes at Ascot yesterday produced perhaps the most welcome and popular result of the new Flat racing season when Longboat beat Gildoran and Spicy Story to give Dick Hern his first winner of 1985.

It is just three weeks since the Major was discharged from hospital at Stoke Mandeville. Though still only recovering slowly from the paralysing effects of his foxhunting fall just before Christmas, he is very much back in full charge of the West Ilsley stable.

Thanks to a specially-converted four-wheel drive vehicle, he goes up on the downs two or three times a week for work-days and, according to assistant trainer Ian Cocks sees the horses go out every morning.

He knows every single two-year-old already," Cocks says—and that with more than 50 to recognise is some achievement.

Willie Carson did not, in the end, have to use his full strength on Longboat. But it has to be admitted that—as I suspect Dick Hern will have detected from his television screen—Mr Dick Hollingsworth's good four-year-old was almost certainly a lucky winner.

Pat Eddery does not lose many races he should win, but here he made a comprehensive mess of things on Spicy Story and ended up zig-zagging vainly from outside to inside and back again.

Spicy Story still only failed by two rapidly-disappearing necks and as his rider admitted to Ian Balding, "should have won by at least three lengths."

There are, of course, no penalties for that brand of "careless riding."

Unlike Henry Cecil and Lester Piggott, Walter Swinburn came on to Ascot after his session with the disciplinary committee. Two furlongs out in the Autobar Stakes many in the crowd were longing to cheer him home on Ma Petite Jolie — if only as a gesture of sympathy for what seems to many of us a savage and quite unnecessarily severe penalty.

If you get three weeks for that, what on earth are they going to do when someone commits a serious offence?

A West Ilsley double looked on the cards when Carson brought Trojan Prince to challenge the supposedly faint-hearted Vertige two furlongs out in the White Rose Stakes.

But Vertige, who had led from the start, turned out both willing and able. He ran on strongly to give Henry Cecil some consolation for an expensive morning at Portman Square and provided Steve Cauthen with a 25th birthday winner.

Unfortunately, by contrast, Lester Piggott's car developed 'flu en route to Ascot, so he missed a winning ride on Purchasepaperchase.

A high draw was almost certainly an advantage in the Autobar Victoria Cup but Tremblant won with so much in hand that 24 out of 24 was hardly needed.

ESSEX HOLD SWAY DESPITE RICE'S 4-24

By MICHAEL CAREY at Trent Bridge

ESSEX, though unable to develop a rousing start by Paul Prichard and Graham Gooch, still held sway during a keenly-contested day at Trent Bridge yesterday, making 273 and then reducing Nottinghamshire to 35 for two.

Until Rice, with four for 24, and the accurate Cooper intervened, Notts might well have settled for anything under 400, when Prichard and Gooch were savaging much indifferent bowling in an opening stand of 121.

They restored order, but Essex were still formidably placed on a pitch offering something to the quicker bowlers, as Foster soon showed by removing Robinson and Randall in a penetrative opening spell.

Few sides have wanted to bat first at Trent Bridge in recent seasons; even fewer have been offered the encouragement afforded to Gooch and Prichard, who made 50 from the first eight overs, which were liberally sprinkled with long hops and half-volleys.

This provided rich entertainment for spectators who had been admitted free in the hope of engendering further interest later in the season, with Prichard losing nothing in comparison with his more eminent partner.

From a balanced, upright stance he seems to see the ball earlier than most and missed little that could be hooked or pulled, while timing several excellent strokes through the covers.

Gooch, who had started with 11 off Saxelby's first over, found himself cast for once in a supporting role, and for both batsmen the main problem seemed to be waiting for the rare good ball so as not to be taken by surprise.

It must have been a relief to Notts when Gooch's timing temporarily deserted him and the first break through was, unsurprisingly, self-inflicted when Prichard, having driven a wide half-volley from Pick to the boundary, was caught behind attempting something similar in the same over.

By now the accurate Cooper had illustrated that the ball would sometimes bounce or move about, which had not been readily detectable earlier, though it took Rice to show exactly what length and line could achieve.

Gooch, however, was still there, moving inside the line to assault Such through the covers and finding Saxelby still highly accommodating, so it was a bonus for Notts when he missed with an imperious pull against Pick and was bowled.

With Pringle and Fletcher starting together, a calm now settled on the innings that had seemed unlikely earlier, and the nudge and deflexion took over from the full blade of the bat.

Rice then induced Fletcher to slash wildly at a lifting outswinger, and Pringle, suggesting stubbornness rather than fluency, drove over a ball of full length, leaving the lower order to make the best of things.

This had always seemed a pitch on which Foster might be effective, and he produced a ball which Robinson could only edge to slip, where McEwan caught him spectacularly, while Randall then fell to an extravagant stroke outside the off-stump.

Cowdrey & Hinks to Kent's rescue

By DOUG IBBOTSON at Canterbury

CHRIS COWDREY, with a superb and chanceless 159, joined Simon Hinks (92) in raising Kent from potential ruin to riches in their County Championship match against Surrey at Canterbury yesterday.

Cowdrey who hit two sixes and 17 fours, and Hinks, with 15 fours, came together with the score at 16 to dominate the day's play with a fourth wicket partnership of 173 off 52 overs.

It enabled Kent to reach a formidable 336 to which Surrey, in the remaining six overs, responded with five runs for the loss of Graham Clinton, their former Kent opener.

Kent's Mayday distress signals began with the first ball dismissal of Benson, lbw to a swinging full length delivery from Thomas. Tavare, facing Taylor, then dropped the ball defensively at his feet from where it trickled back to dislodge the leg bail.

Thomas claimed his second wicket in six overs at a cost of only two runs when Aslett, offering no stroke, was lbw and Kent were 16 for three. But bold counter-measures were at hand.

Hinks, driving powerfully through or over the field, and Cowdrey, who was soon matching him blow for blow, achieved their first 50 partnership in 17 overs, the second in 11 and the third in 16.

Pocock, meanwhile, lacking the services of Clarke and, unexpectedly Monkhouse, permutated limited resources as best he might. While Thomas in particular bowled wholeheartedly, it remained for Jesty, lately called upon, to break the stand in taking his first wicket for Surrey.

QUINLAN WORRIES LEICS

By DEREK HODGSON at The Parks

JEREMY QUINLAN enjoyed a shining moment in his Oxford career yesterday at the Parks in capturing four Leicestershire wickets — including Gower's.

The tall, strong freshman from Sherborne would accept that his right-arm medium pace was helped by a damp patch at the pavilion end from which the ball lifted slowly at varying levels.

However, Quinlan could also seam the ball mostly into the bat, and the deliveries that dismissed Whittaker and Gower were first-class.

Balderstone and Briers fell at short leg to balls that popped, and Whittaker got an inside edge to make Quinlan's bowling figures read 5-2-9-3. Parsons mis-hit to mid-on while Butcher accrued 95, including 14 fours, before he tried a quick single to the hawk-eyed Rutnagur and had his stumps rattled by a deadly throw from square on.

Gower moved across to drive Quinlan and chopped the ball into his stumps. Then Leicestershire, at 172 for six, demonstrated the sting in the professional tail as Willey and Garnham added 96 for the seventh wicket.

The wicketkeeper completed his maiden century just before the close, coming off 236 balls with 11 fours.

FRENCH IN TUNE FOR ROME CUP

By ALAN SMITH in Rome

FRENCH showjumpers tuned up for today's Nations Cup with a double at Rome's international horse show yesterday. The winners were Philippe Rozier on Crocodile and Michel Robert on Jean de la Tour.

Only a ferocious gamble by Brazilian Felipe de Azevedo prevented them from completing a hat-trick for they were lying first, second and third when he came in last in the Premio Lancia Thema.

Frederic Cottier and Flambeau at their best are nearly irresistible and they looked close to that peak when they took the lead in the Piazza di Siena.

Pierre Durand and Jappeloup, third in the Volvo World Cup Final 10 days ago, could not quite match their pace, but Azevedo, one of a strong squad of Brazilians headed by Nelson Pessoa, clearly felt he had nothing to lose on Itebuchona and his audacity paid a rich dividend.

Germany third

Almost the only consolation for the British was the third place by Jean Germany and Mandingo behind Rosier and Crocodile in the Premio Marone Cinzano.

Mandingo also finished third on Tuesday and he has yet to have a fence down at the show. Accurate jumping is what will be needed in the Nations Cup and Mandingo, who has only a couple of minor outings behind him this year, obviously has his eye in already.

Crocodile, an American-bred Appaloosa, looks a typical Red Indian pony with his spots and white patches, but he has shown he can jump big fences in his brief career with the French team and yesterday he galloped right over them.

Rozier, son of the French team manager, was also third on Kala behind his compatriots Michel Robert, bronze medallist in the 1982 world championships and a member, like Cottier and Flambeau, of the winning team there.

At least the British will have the advantage of going after the French in today's Nations Cup, drawn respectively third and fourth of the six in the line-up.

DAVIES IS NEW MCC PRESIDENT

By MICHAEL MELFORD

GEORGE MANN, the president of the MCC, yesterday nominated J. G. W. Davies at the Lord's annual general meeting as his successor.

The former county cricketer and executive director of the Bank of England, takes up office on Oct. 1.

Jack Davies, 73, played for Kent between 1934-51 and has had a long association with Cambridge cricket — its highlight in the public imagination being one ball in 1934 which bowled Don Bradman for nought on a perfect Fenner's pitch.

The sensation which this undergraduate off-spinner's feat caused was a tribute to The Don's near-invincibility at the time. But it was only one achievement in Davies' career as a sportsman which included an England rugby trial as a centre playing for Blackheath and Kent.

Joyous exhibition

Injury robbed him of a cricket Blue in 1931 when a freshman from Tonbridge. He played twice subsequently against Oxford at Lord's, taking eight wickets in 1934.

In all, he took more than 250 first-class wickets and made four 100s, three in 1946 when he played more often for Kent than usual—and incidentally received the OBE following war service in the Middlesex Regiment and at the War Office.

A brilliant fielder, he was a batsman of the old classic style with high backlift and flowing off-drives. His opening stand of 143 in 105 minutes with Arthur Fagg against Yorkshire at Maidstone in one of his last matches in 1951 sticks in my memory as a joyous exhibition of the art of batting.

Davies' cricket was restricted by a career which for a time embraced United Nations jobs before he returned to Cambridge for 16 years as secretary of the Appointments Board.

Allott punishes Gloucestershire

By MICHAEL AUSTIN at Bristol

PAUL ALLOTT'S career-best innings of 78 off 72 balls in a last-wicket partnership of 115 with John Stanworth punished Goucestershire and transformed Lancashire's grimaces to broad smiles at Bristol yesterday.

Lancashire, having struggled at 94 for six, advanced to an improbable 318 all out before Allott dismissed Stovold third ball, and Gloucestershire finished their care-worn day at two for one.

A chilling crossfield wind, testing the hardiest of fielders, was the least of Gloucestershire's problems. Bainbridge, the new vice-captain, suffered a cracked cheekbone when fielding at slip and Russell, the nightwatchman, retired hurt after being struck on the helmet by Allott.

Lawrence's figures of five for 39 by early afternoon offered false promise of a career best when finishing with five for 79 and his fortunes ran curiously parallel withthose of Gloucestershire, who had gleefully put in Lancashire on a lively, green pitch.

Lancashire's scorecard had a bottom heavy look with four half century makers in the middle and lower order. Jefferies and Watkinson each scored 57 and shared a seventh-wicket partnership of 69 and Stanworth's maiden 50 helped Allott to clinch full batting points.

Allott, the England fast bowler hit two sixes and 12 fours in an uninhibited innings which expressed his delight to be playing again after an inflamed nerve at the base of his spine forced an early return from the winter tour of India.

Lawrence, 21, Gloucester-born of West Indian parents, proved the benefits of his winter spent playing grade cricket in Perth, Australia, but the day's events offered a bewildering introduction for Gloucestershire's newcomers, Davison, Lloyds and Curran, who took three wickets.

MIDDLESEX IN MERRY MOOD

By D. J. RUTNAGUR at Fenner's

Middlesex's batsmen feasted on the Cambridge University bowling after being put in on a slow Fenner's pitch yesterday, declaring at 369 for four, the biggest total against the light Blues in four matches this season.

Cambridge, in the 42 minutes remaining on a sunlit evening, scored 38 without loss. Rob Andrew, at last free of an eye infection picked up on the rugby field, ended his run of miserably low scores and was unbeaten with 28.

Tomlins, the last man to go in before the declaration and unbeaten with 34, was the only Middlesex batsman not to pass 50. The opposing attack was not Cambridge's strongest, for Ellison was stricken with 'flu and Grimes could be used only sparingly because of an ankle injury.

Downton, continuing as opener, dominated the first-wicket partnership of 88 with Slack (81). Eventually, Slack was also overtaken by Gatting, with whom he shared a second-wicket partnership of 126. Slack may have been slow but was far from dull to watch.

Gatting scored his 80 runs off 92 balls with nine fours and three straight sixes off the off spinner Gorman. Butcher, too, was vehement, scoring 56 in even time.

Australians start in expert fashion

By DAVID GREEN

THE Australian tour party flew in to Heathrow yesterday morning and some three hours after touchdown gave a Press conference at the Waldorf Hotel. This was handled expertly by the manager, Bob Merriman, and the captain, Allan Border.

Mr Merriman dealt swiftly with the controversy over the defection of Terry Alderman, Rod McCurdy and Steve Rixon who have agreed to take part in a rebel tour of South Africa this autumn.

"This is a matter for the Australian Cricket Board," said Mr Merriman. "There is no point in discussing it here." He further stated that suggestions that the touring party constituted a "second team" in view of the absence of these players was "an insult."

Mr Merriman's view was confirmed by Border who said that there were several line ball " decisions over the original selections. Border did not see that his team's prospects had been seriously damaged.

Border faces a stiff task because no Australian captain has successfully defended the Ashes in England since Greg Chappell in 1975. Nevertheless he does not feel that the responsibility of captaincy will adversely affect his own play.

Despite the furore caused by the projected South African tour both Mr Merriman and Border stressed that the party is a very happy one. The spirit has been excellent since they assembled in Melbourne on Monday.

Much will depend on Border's own form but in Keppler Wessels, Graeme Wood and Dirk Wellham they have batsmen with first-class experience in England. Only two players, Simon O'Donnell and Ray Phillips have not previously played here at some level.

Quick wickets will suit the tourists who have Geoff Lawson as a formidable fast bowling spearhead together with the promising and rapid Craig McDermott, at 20 the party's baby. Veteran leg spinner Bob Holland, 38, will also profit by such pitches.

Miandad and Holmes tame Somerset

By ERIC HILL at Taunton

A FINE recovery by Glamorgan, launched by the brilliance of Javed Miandad, 86, and Geoffrey Holmes, 88, steered them to an impressive 387 for seven declared at Taunton. Somerset, replying with eight for one wicket.

After the Glamorgan third-wicket pair had added 183, a new record against Somerset, their captain, Rodney Ontong, and Younis Ahmed added crisp half centuries against an attack which, in good batting conditions, spent much of the day in full retreat.

Holmes and Miandad came together at 26 for two. Hopkins, missed at slip in the bitter breeze from Botham's third ball, was lbw to Davis and Jones was well taken from a firm hit by the lonely extra cover in Palmer's first over.

For a long time the support offered to the determined opening spell of Davis and Botham was so untidy that Popplewell was pressed into service after Marks had been cavalierly dismissed from the attack, Miandad having driven his first ball for a skimming six.

Botham slows progress

The pair feasted royally and brilliantly to the tune of 183 runs in 44 overs. But Botham, with a fiery spell after lunch from around the wicket, came back to slow progress, stabilising the whole Somerset effort.

The bat was passed a time or two and the pair left in successive overs. Marks schemed a stumping for Holmes, who had batted 48 overs for his 86, and then Miandad was caught behind off Davis for 88, which included a six and 14 fours.

When five, Ontong escaped at short leg off the persevering Davis, who ended with a worthy three for 61. But then he—after hitting a six through the Press box window—and Younis took charge against Palmer and Marks as they added a lively 92.

Thomas struck some powerful blows and when Ontong was out his declaration left 10 difficult overs. The fiery Thomas yorked Roebuck and might easily have had two more wickets as the rapidly - improving Glamorgan completed another highly satisfactory day.

West Indies put end to 16-year drought

By TONY COZIER in Bridgetown, Barbados

THE West Indies broke a 16-year winning drought against New Zealand in Bridgetown yesterday with a 10-wicket victory in the third Test of the present four-Test series.

It was the first West Indies' Test win over New Zealand since the first of the 1969 series in Auckland. Since then the teams have played 12 times, New Zealand winning two with the others all drawn.

When Gordon Greenidge hit the winning runs 37 minutes into the final day it was the first outright result recorded in the eight matches between the teams in the Caribbean. New Zealand drew all five Tests on their only previous tour in 1972 and the first two Tests of this series were also drawn.

Coney soon goes

This victory was a mere formality when play resumed with New Zealand 228 for eight in their second innings, still needing 14 to wipe out their first innings deficit and make the West Indies bat again. At least they achieved that although they lost their vice-captain, Coney, when still seven runs short.

Coney, who batted defiantly on the previous day for 81, added only two before he pulled the most effective West Indies bowler, Marshall, straight to Logie at backward square leg. He lasted three hours 55 minutes in all.

Smith resumed his innings interrupted on the previous afternoon by a painful blow on the forearm from Marshall and put New Zealand ahead with two cuts over the slips for boundaries, but Marshall soon accounted for him in taking 7-80, 11-120 in the match.

The Australian Cricket Board are to take legal action against at least seven of its contracted players to prevent them from playing in South Africa next season.

The board also announced yesterday they would take legal action against the South African Cricket Union and Bruce Francis, the Sydney-based organiser of the tour, for inducing the players to break their contracts with the ACB.

The seven players contracted to the board until Sept. 30, 1986, are John Dyson and Steve Smith of New South Wales, Rodney Hogg and Graham Yallop of Victoria, Carl Rackemann and John Maguire of Queensland, and Tom Hogan of Western Australia.

TITLE CHANCE FOR WILLIS

By KEN MAYS

Tony Willis has a second chance to win the British lightweight championship when he meets Ian McLeod, of Scotland, for the vacant title at the Digbeth Town Hall, Birmingham, on May 16.

The Liverpudlian was due to meet Paul Chance in a final eliminator. But the Wednesbury fighter who was outpointed by Ken Foreman last week, withdrew for the second time with injuries and promoter Pat Lynch made the new match.

It was only given the go-ahead after rival promoter Ron Gray, who secured the eliminator, had been assured that Chance would be the first challenger and that it took place on his promotion at the Civic Hall, Wolverhampton.

Ray Clarke, the British Boxing Board of Control secretary, said it was willing to recognise the match for the vacant crown but a full explanation of the actual agreement was first required.

Willis challenged George Feeney for the title in London during 1983, but was stopped in one round

SHILTON KEEPS ENGLAND ON COURSE

By DONALD SAUNDERS in Bucharest

Rumania ...... 0 England ...... 0

ENGLAND consolidated their position at the top of their World Cup qualifying group in Bucharest yesterday, wresting a hard-earned point from a match Rumania surely would have won if their shooting had been straighter or Peter Shilton were not still a great goalkeeper.

Bobby Robson had always expected this would be the most dangerous part of England's journey along the route to next year's finals in Mexico.

So it is likely to be. Indeed, as they flew home last night, Robson's men were left with no illusions about the difficulties of reaching Mexico, let alone succeeding if they get there.

Easy victories over Finland and Turkey and a somewhat lucky win in Belfast had tended to raise hopes that England were well on the way to becoming a major force in world soccer again.

At the August 23 Stadium last evening, it became apparent that much hard work remains to be done — especially in the creative department — before they are ready to take on the best in the world.

There were times in the second half when Shilton's goalkeeping and backs-to-the-wall defence by Butcher and his colleagues were all that prevented Rumania from marching to a handsome May Day victory.

It was certainly the most interesting, as well as the most difficult, game England have been involved in during the present campaign.

In an absorbing first half, both teams built moves neatly and skilfully in midfield, where Wilkins and Klein conducted a clean, tactical battle.

Despite the early loss of Iorgulescu, a key defender, the Rumanians enjoyed slightly the better of this early struggle and created more chances.

Defence tested

Unfortunately for them, their front-runners, usually excellent marksmen, did not make the most of their opportunities.

This was partly because England's defence—being thoroughly tested for the first time since they met Uruguay, in Montevideo nearly a year ago — played with such assurance.

The remarkably confident Wright fitted in smoothly alongside the admirably calm Butcher in the centre. Anderson was back to his best on the right-flank, and Sansom was sharp and reliable as ever.

Even so, Shilton had to move smartly to turn aside a fierce shot by Negrila, and Camataru, Hagi and Klein should have made far better use of close-range opportunities.

England's best first-half chance fell to Robson, whose fierce header from Barnes' free kick bounced back off the angle of bar and post.

Disappointing Robson

That was one of Robson's few positive contributions, during one of his least influential performances in an England shirt.

Undoubtedly, Robson's failure to move forward or defend with his usual skill and purpose was a major reason for the distinct change that came over the game after the interval.

Now Rumania built up moves skilfully, sometimes with bewildering speed. Soon they were dominating the game.

England's midfield would have been over-run, if Wilkins had not stubbornly defied Klein, Rednic and Baloni with the aid of the industrious Steven.

England's back four, under almost ceaseless pressure, stuck grimly to their task, allowing the Rumanians as little time and space as possible for a shot or header.

Yet Camataru, Hagi and Coras all should have scored. Hagi twice miss-directed shots from good positions, and Coras headed wide from only a few yards.

Breathtaking saves

Moreover, when Camataru and Hagi did eventually get their range and direction correct, Shilton was there to frustrate them with breathtaking saves.

England's goalkeeper dived at the base of the post to save bravely from Camataru, and leapt the other way to turn aside Hagi's shot from point-blank range.

So, it would have been utterly unjust if Mariner had snatched victory near the end, instead of scooping England's only second-half chance over the bar from a few yards out.

Indeed, after Waddle had replaced Barnes and Lineker had taken over from Mariner, England were only too happy to hang on for a point.

ENGLAND.—Shilton (Southampton); Anderson (Arsenal), Sansom (Arsenal), Steven (Everton), Wright (Southampton), Butcher (Ipswich), Robson (Manchester United), Wilkins (AC Milan), Mariner (Arsenal), Francis (Sampdoria), Barnes (Watford). Subs: Waddle (for Barnes 72), Lineker (for Mariner 85).

RUMANIA. — Lung(?)u, Stefanescu, Iorgulescu, Rednic, Ungureanu, Coras, Klein, Camataru, Baloni, Hagi, Boloni(?). Subs: Iovan (for Iorgulescu 39), Lacatus (for Coras 77).

ROBSON IS SATISFIED

By COLIN MALAM

Bobby Robson, the England manager, paid tribute to the goalkeeping of Peter Shilton and the defending of the men in front of him.

"I'm quite pleased with the result," he said. "The important thing was that Rumania didn't get two points. It was a workmanlike performance by us, and I think you could say we have our first foot over the threshold of qualification.

Shilton prowess

"Our back four played very well indeed. The two full-backs didn't miss a tackle all afternoon and Terry Butcher showed he is becoming a real world-class player.

"As for Peter Shilton, he made hard goalkeeping look very easy.

"It was a hard, gruelling match and our players ended it with great respect for the Rumanians. They were firm and resolute, but they were fair."

HAPPY WALES' DILEMMA

The indelible memory from Wales' World Cup success against Spain is Mark Hughes' superb goal in their 3-0 win, a 15-yard scissor kick of such acrobatic expertise, power and placement as to qualify as one of the great goals of all-time, writes Roger Malone.

Having gained the lead in Group Seven, Wales face a difficult decision over whether to give finance or their favourite ground top priority for their remaining match against Scotland in September.

The win over Spain makes it eight unbeaten matches at Wrexham's Racecourse Ground during Mike England's five-year managerial reign. He and his squad are convinced their chances of a second victory over Scotland will be greater if their rapport with this stadium and its crowd is maintained.

Yet the Welsh F.A., their finances critically reduced by the demise of the British Championship games, realise they would make much more money by playing Scotland at Cardiff's National Stadium.

Tempting profit

The famous rugby ground holds 60,000 spectators compared to Wrexham's 28,000-capacity. There are also 30,000 seats, and a £250,000 profit could accrue by playing in Cardiff.

Mr England and his players, though, are not allowing this dilemma, to be decided next week, to cloud their joy at this week's proof that they have become, in three successive World Cup wins, a well-balanced, effective team, and a very fit team. That is the manager's view.

Van den Hauwe, Tuesday's newcomer, is in the defence to stay, and the perfect mixture of skill, speed and strength in the Ian Rush-Hughes spearhead improves with every match.

Providing Scotland win in Iceland this month, despite lacking Dalglish, Nicol, Hansen and Wark because of Liverpool's European Cup Final—and Spain take maximum points from two games against Iceland—the Wales v Scotland encounter will become crucial.

SWINDON HAS NEW RINK

By HOWARD BASS

Britain's 40th ice rink has opened in Swindon. Designed for public skating and ice hockey and with accommodation for 1,500 spectators, it is part of the Link Centre, an £11 million leisure complex to be operated by Thameside Borough Council.

An American-designed ice surface measuring 56 metres x 26 metres, the first of its type to be installed in Britain, it has been fitted with all ice hockey requirements and there are plans for a local team to join the Heineken League.

Tottenham favourites to sign Waddle

By ROGER MALONE

CHRIS WADDLE, Newcastle's England forward coveted by Tottenham, and perhaps by Liverpool, has had an enormous £100,000 bait dangled in front of him to remain at St James' Park.

That is the reported amount, in signing-on-fee and wages, which his languid skills would earn him if he agreed to sign a new contract with Newcastle when his present one ends this summer.

But Jack Charlton, Newcastle's manager, conceded yesterday that his club, trying to build a positive future in the First Division following promotion last season, are likely to lose their outstanding talent.

Tottenham, who had a £550,000 bid turned down on transfer deadline day, remain favourites to sign the potential star-of-the-future.

Liverpool's advantage

Liverpool, understood to be still weighing up how good Waddle might become in a year or so, have the advantage of being able to offer, in part-exchange, two players who Newcastle would welcome, defender Gary Gillespie and reserve goalkeeper Bob Bolder.

Arsenal, another ambitious London club who have not quite satisfied their demanding following this season, may also want Waddle, but Manchester United, once thought to be interested, will make no bid for him.

Mark Barham, Norwich's nimble midfielder sorely missed in their recent slide into relegation trouble, was back in training yesterday—after fears that a hamstring strain could put him out for the rest of the season.

Manager Ken Brown, although doubtful that Barham will be fit enough to return against Manchester United on Saturday, said last night: "I am confident he might figure in my plans for at least our final two matches."

Contract for Mills

Gary Mills, whose big-hearted reply to breaking both legs in the past two seasons has been to regain his place in Nottingham Forest's midfield and score in three of the last four games, is to be rewarded with a new three-year contract.

Bobby Moore, the Southend manager so highly-respected by referees for his conduct during a distinguished West Ham and England playing career, has asked League referee Dave Axcell to instruct his players how to behave.

During Southend's decline down the Fourth Division, six of their players have been suspended. "It's essential there is a better liason between players and referees," said Mr Moore.

Cudmore beaten by Australian heroes

By TONY FAIRCHILD in Antibes

COLIN BEASHEL and his Australian crew continued their dominance of the Champagne Mumm-sponsored French match-racing series in Antibes yesterday when they completed eight rounds unbeaten.

Beashel, one of the heroes of the Australian II triumph in the America's Cup in 1983, finished the day also with a win over the British representative, Harold Cudmore.

Beashel had opened with a victory over the Swiss, Michel Maedor, and as the Coupe du Monde des Skippers continued in blistering sunshine under the walls of Old Antibes, he disposed of Michel Teweles, helmsman of France III for part of the America's Cup preliminaries two years ago.

Beashel, one of four helmsmen now being tried in match-race combat by the Alan Bond syndicate, was the Australia II crewman who went twice to the top of the 12-metre mast to effect repairs during one of the historic Cup races.

Fewster in crew

Among Beashel's crew in Antibes, and to compete also in the Westerly sponsored Lymington Cup starting on May 10, is Damien Fewster, replacement bowman on Australia II when Scotty McAlister broke an arm in another mast incident during the 1983 Cup preliminaries.

Australia's crewing has been an impressive feature of the Antibes event, in which Cudmore yesterday extended his score by two further wins—the unsettled overnight protest in which he was involved having gone his way.

But, having then lost his second meeting with Beashel, Cudmore last night still faced another protest in the meeting which has, though, been surprisingly free of serious dispute.

PROVISIONAL RESULTS.—6th rd: Y. Pajot (France) bt T. Nava (Italy); C. Dickson (US) bt J. Faroux (France); C. Beashel (Australia) bt M. Maeder (Switzerland), H. Cudmore bt M. Teweles (France).

7th rd: Nava bt Faroux: Dickson bt Pajot, Beashel bt Teweles: Cudmore bt Maeder. 8th rd: Dickson bt Nava; Beashel bt Cudmore; Teweles bt Maeder; Pajot bt Faroux.

Overall: Beashel 8 wins, 1; Dickson 7, 2; Cudmore 5, 3.

Whiteside sends N. Ireland on

By MICHAEL CALVIN

Northern Ireland ... 2 Turkey ... 0

NORMAN WHITESIDE, a rare young man with the competitive temperament of a veteran, last night scored goals which rescued Northern Ireland from an unexpectedly nervous ordeal against Turkey at Windsor Park, Belfast.

The Irish lingering disappointment with England's failure to win in Rumania in their mutual Group 3 was replaced by a disturbing sense of anxiety which offered the Turks a rare glimpse of success.

Apparently overwhelmed by the need to record a convincing victory in their last home game, the Irish were disjointed and appeared to lack any semblance of attacking ingenuity.

Even their traditionally partisan supporters caught the mood, watching in near silence as the Turks, conditioned to failure at international level, discovered some self belief.

Jennings' save

Jennings playing in his sixth World Cup qualifying campaign, had to make an acrobatic save from the industrious Metin and then had cause to be grateful for Stewart's saving tackle on Hassan.

Understandably the crowd greeted Whiteside's breakthrough with very vocal relief. McClelland advanced down the left and crossed for Whiteside, timing his run perfectly, to head beyond Erhan in the Turkish goal.

However, Whiteside's zeal in the end proved costly. His booking in the 74th minute for a push on Rasit ensures that he will be suspended for the return match in Ismir in September.

Whiteside, readapting to an attacking role with such maturity that it was easy to overlook the fact that he is still not 20 years old, lifted the pressure still further with a second goal eight minutes after the interval.

Quinn and Brotherston created confusion in the Turkish defence before Nicholl supplied a near-post cross which Whiteside converted with a decisive downward header.

All the earlier traumas were forgotten as the Irishmen now demonstrated urgency their task required. Their new sense of purpose was typified by McClelland who beat three men in a surging run before firing a 25-yard drive which flew just wide.

NORTHERN IRELAND. — Jennings (Arsenal); Nicholl (West Bromwich), Donaghy (Luton), O'Neill (Leicester), McClelland (Watford), Ramsey (Leicester), Brotherston (Blackburn), McIlroy (Stoke), Quinn (Blackburn), Whiteside (Man. Utd), Stewart (QPR).

By BILL MEREDITH

HOLLAND, beaten finalists in the 1974 and 1978 World Cup finals, are clinging to a faint hope of reaching Mexico next year after a 1—1 draw with Austria in Rotterdam last night.

Holland are now five points behind Hungary in Group Five—and they have to visit Budapest on May 14.

NORWAY THWART IRISH

Republic of Ireland ... 0, Norway ... 0

THE Republic of Ireland's dreams of qualifying for the 1986 World Cup Finals were dealt a devastating blow in Dublin last night.

Norway played out a lack-lustre goalless draw at Lansdowne Road to minimise the chances of manager Eoin Hand taking his men to Mexico.

The Irish, with just three points from four games, face a gargantuan task this summer.

Their remaining four matches take in the group leaders Switzerland, home and away, a trip to play the Russians, and a home game against Denmark.

The Republic had the better of the early exchanges and forced three corners in as many minutes. After half-an-hour, Galvin hit a volley from a cross by Daly, but Thorstvedt in the Norwegian goal made a great save.

Five minutes later, Thoresen had a chance to put Norway ahead when he was set free down the middle. But Bonner in the Irish goal deflected the shot for a corner.

Stapleton put the ball away in the 58th minute after a header from O'Leary came back off the crossbar. But it was disallowed, and added to the frustration of the crowd, who had booed their side off at half-time.

The Irish never looked like breaking the deadlock and, despite the efforts of Liverpool's Lawrenson in particular, will need to reflect that honest endeavour is no substitute for skill.

The sight of Liam Brady walking disconsolately to the touchline after being substituted for the first time in 51 internationals told it all.

THURSDAY GUIDE BY RONALD HASTINGS

BBC-1

6 50 a.m.-9.20 BREAKFAST TIME, with Frank Bough and Mike Smith. 10.30-10.50 Play School.

12 30 NEWS, WEATHER. 12.57 Regional News. (London and South East only: Financial Report and News). 1 Pebble Mill at One: Princess Anne presents the 1985 Youth Caring Awards. 1.45-2 Trumpton, rpt. 3.53 (not London) Regional News.

3 55 MOP AND SMIFF: The Special Day. 4.10 Ivor the Engine, rpt. 4.15 Jigsaw. 4.30 Bananaman, rpt. 4.35 Dogtanian and the Three Muskehounds. 4.55 John Craven's Newsround.

5 05 BLUE PETER—Including preview of Sunday's 24th Historic Commercial Vehicle Society's London to Brighton run. (Ceefax). 5.35 Dr. Kildare, rpt. (Wales: Wales Today).

6 00 NEWS, WEATHER.

6 35 REGIONAL MAGAZINES. (Wales: Dr. Kildare).

7 00 EASTENDERS—Another chapter of East End life. (Ceefax).

7 30 TOMORROW'S WORLD—Lively presentation of new ideas in the world of science.

7 55 TOP OF THE POPS—Introduced by Mike Smith and Richard Skinner.

8 30 THE LENNY HENRY SHOW — Comedy repeat. (Wales: Week In Week Out).

9 00 NEWS, WEATHER.

9 25 CRIMEWATCH U.K.—With three unsolved, serious crimes requiring viewers' attention, two children who died in a fire at Hastings, two ladies who vanished from North Wales and two very valuable stolen rings.

10 05 QUESTION TIME—Sue Lawley in the chair again, with Lord Barnett, Margaret Clay, Patrick Jenkin and Michael Montague.

11 05 CRIMEWATCH UPDATE — Developments and progress from the earlier programme.

11 15 THE LEARNING MACHINE—Why is so much educational software so lousy? That is the question posed by Tim O'Shea. 11.40 Weather.

BBC-2

6 30 a.m.-7.20 OPEN UNIVERSITY. 9.38-2.35 p.m. Daytime on Two, a sequence of nine short educational programmes. 5.25 News, Weather. 5.30 Lifegames: The Powers That Be, Steve Blacknell on bureaucracy, rpt.

6 00 THE INVADERS—The Ransom. Vincent and one of his believers capture an alien leader, but he is too important to keep for fear of reprisals.

6 50 PHIL SILVERS—As Sergeant Bilko in "Dinner at Sowici's". Repeat, b/w.

7 15 CARTOON TWO—Seaside Woman. A sleepy Caribbean village, with music by Wings.

7 20 ★ RECOVERY—The Move: Vickers Defence Systems. A new, five-part series about well known manufacturing companies which have been close to financial disaster, but struggled to pull through. Vickers once employed 140,000, built Spitfires and Wellingtons, half the guns, one-third of our tanks and 250 R.N. ships, now they employ only 22,000 with many huge works and buildings demolished. Nationalisation removed half of Vickers's profit-making. In a good, important film Brian Redhead visits Newcastle to meet the managing director, Gerry Boxall. They are still making rows of tanks.

7 45 HOW WE LOOK — The Art of Making Faces. Colin Thompson on how reliable faces are to reflect character in art, with side glances at Darwin and horses.

8 30 TOPOL'S ISRAEL—Passing through Masada, past the Dead Sea to the desert of the Red Sea and Eilat where, like the Holiday programme, they have topless bathing.

9 00 LEAVING—Returning for another six-part series by the industrious and, for some, monotonous, Carla Lane, with Susan Hampshire and as her ex-husband, Keith Barron, now about to start new lives. (Ceefax).

9 30 ★ FORTY MINUTES—Laughter in Gabrovo. The Balkan town has, unbelievably, a House of Humour and Satire where a festival of laughter is regularly held attended by wits and comics. Done more or less straight-faced or deadpan, this is a remarkably entertaining film with the sturdy natives described seriously as "a nation of fun-loving rose-growers" living in "the Manchester of Bulgaria". Scene after scene of heavily built, glowering funsters enjoying a joke on the stairs or gazing at such risible representations as statues. No less than 80 humour operatives work at the House but the overall effect is one of wriggling misery. Our English visitors don't find the lack of alcoholic drinks half as funny as the local Bulgarian suits, and there is a boring avalanche of cartoons identifying President Reagan with Mister H. Bomb.

10 05 NAT GONELLA, THAT RHYTHM MAN!—A concert celebrating the first date by the Nat Gonella band in Newcastle 50 years ago, with Mr. Gonella still here to sing songs, with the Digby Fairweather Sextet.

10 40 NEWSNIGHT—At 11.25 Weather. 11.30 Weekend Outlook, Open University preview. 11.35-12.30 Open University.

U.S. RECOVERY SLOWDOWN TO HEAD TALKS

By FRANCES WILLIAMS Economics Correspondent

THE row over President Reagan's planned wreath laying at the Bitburg war cemetery on Sunday has pushed into the shadows the main purpose of his German visit—the two-day Bonn economic summit which begins this evening.

Yet the deliberations of the seven world leaders and their foreign and finance ministers will have far more lasting influence on the global economic and political climate over the coming year.

Dominating the discussions will be the sharp slowdown in the pace of United State's recovery.

This has been the locomotive dragging Europe and Japan out of recession over the past two years. Also there is the problem of what the rest of the industrial world can do to "pick up the baton" to keep the world economy moving.

The Americans are pressing other summit countries, notably Germany and Japan, to stimulate their economies to "take up the slack."

They want Europe to embrace American-style free market policies to encourage growth and jobs with less government regulation, fewer controls, more flexible employment and wage systems.

And they want Japan to do more to open up its markets to foreign goods and capital.

Final communique

These relatively uncontentious proposals will probably find their way, in sanitised form, into the final communique on Saturday. But in recent speeches both Mr James Baker, the United States Treasury Secretary, and Mr eGorge Shultz, Secretary of State, have gone much further in arguing for more relaxed financial policies.

This is not a notion which goes down well with the German and Japanese, both of whom have unhappy memories of the 1978 Bonn summit when their agreement to expansion was swiftly followed by accelerating inflation, exacerbated by sky-rocketing oil prices.

As Mr Lawson tartly pointed out last week the American economic miracle, fuelled by a swollen budget deficit, is now looking distinctly tarnished.

The Europeans are likely to have some harsh words to say about the lack of progress in reducing the deficit, high United States interest rates and the overvalued dollar which has produced a gaping trade deficit and vociferous calls for barriers to imports, especially from Japan.

The need to resist the protectionist tide will, along with sustaining world growth, be the second main theme of the summit.

President Reagan wants to come away with a firm date preferably next January or February, for the start of a new trade round under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, (GATT) to offer as a bone to the protectionist wolves in Congress.

But President Mitterrand of France has said he will insist on a parallel commitment to talks on reform of the international monetary system, and especially on how to curb excessive and damaging currency fluctuations, as a condition of agreeing a date for a new GATT round.

Other European countries, including Britain, see no need for a formal link between the two.

Other issues on the economic agenda will include Third World debt problems, where the heads of government are expected to endorse the present case-by-case approach; the plight of drought-stricken sub-Saharan Africa, and environmental pollution, a subject particularly dear to the hearts of the summit's German hosts.

Nicaragua threat

Reagan's peace initiative, which includes providing aid to the rebel Contra forces, there had been further disturbing developments.

These include the new ties between Nicaragua and the Soviet Union announced during the latest visit by Nicaragua's leader, Mr Daniel Ortega, to Moscow, the delivery last week by the Soviet Union of additional helicopters and by East Germany of a large shipment of military transport and the capture in Honduras of seven Nicaraguan agents sent in to assist Honduran insurgents.

When Mr Speakes was asked "Would it be cynical to conclude it was done to take the heat off Bitburg?" He replied "Yes, it would."

Nicaraguan Background—P4
Editorial Comment—P18

Congress urged to help

President Reagan, Mr Speakes said, called on Nicaragua to halt its armed subversion in neighbouring countries, end its military relationship with the Soviet Union and Cuba, and remove their military personnel, stop its massive arms buildup and respect democratic rule and political and human rights.

Mr Reagan also called on Congress to support future administration requests for assistance for "Nicaraguan democratic resistance."

The new measures, said Mr Speakes, "should be seen by the Government of Nicaragua, and by those who abet it, as unmistakable evidence that we take seriously the obligations to protect our security interests and those of our friends."

Mr Reagan acted after consultations with Congress on Tuesday before leaving for Bonn. Mr Speakes said there had also been consultations with other Latin American countries, but said he had no report on their reaction.

Mr Speakes asserted that there had been a change in the attitude of Congress, which by a close vote had turned down United States aid to the Contras, after it saw "the proof of the pudding" in Mr Ortegas visit to Moscow.

The timing of Mr Reagan's announcement aroused suspicion that it had been made to divert attention from the outcry caused by his plans to lay a wreath at a cemetery containing SS war dead.

LIBERAL AND LABOUR WARNINGS

By Our Political Staff

Mr Steel, Liberal leader, yesterday urged the Prime Minister to atempt to dissuade President Reagan from imposing trade sanctions against Nicaragua, asking her to use her influence to dissuade him from "such a foolish course."

Mr Healey, Shadow Foreign Affairs spokesman, urged Mrs Thatcher to dissociate the Government from President Reagan's decision, which, he said, could only be seen as "an act of revenge against the Congress of the United States for refusing to finance terrorism against a country with which America is not at war."

NIGEL WADE IN Moscow writes: The economic embargo against Nicaragua was a bid to break the will of the Nicaraguan people by hunger and privation, Moscow said yesterday. The Soviet Union promised Nicaragua continuing economic support during the Moscow visit by President Ortega, who is now touring Eastern Europe in search of further aid.

'Faked' film puts skids under Baker

By NICHOLAS COMFORT
Political Staff

MR BAKER, Local Government Minister, conceded after a lengthy and embarrassed silence last night that he had slipped on a sizeable "banana skin" in the Conservative eve-of-poll broadcast for today's council elections.

He confirmed that a scene in the programme allegedly broadcast from a factory shut down by the high rate demands of a Labour council had actually been shot in a Limehouse television studio which had once been a banana warehouse.

Mr Baker had been challenged by Dr John Cunningham, Shadow Environment Secretary, about the veracity of his claim that he was speaking from a factory closed by high rates, after incredulous Labour chiefs watched a playback of the programme.

Squalid dishonesty

Dr Cunningham called on the Minister to concede that "this part of your broadcast was a complete fabrication.

"This squalid dishonesty is the latest example of the depths to which you and your party have sunk in a desperate attempt to mislead the people of Britain over responsibility for rate increases," he said in a letter to Mr Baker.

Mr Baker did not reply until well into the evening, and then devoted most of his letter to citing the examples of two firms, one in Sheffield and the other in Birmingham, which had moved or cancelled expansion plans because of high rates.

The letter said: "I am sorry, but not surprised, that you have chosen to misunderstand the clear point of the broadcast.

But he conceded that "all parts were filmed in the Limehouse studio complex which ... has been converted from disused warehouses."

The sole redemming feature of the episode for the Conservatives is that they, too, felt they had ground for complaint about Labour's final broadcast, transmitted last night.

Mr George Walden, MP for Buckingham, claimed that Labour had intended to argue that a run-down school at Winslow was a victim of Tory "cuts," when in fact £600,000 has been earmarked for a replacement.

Not to be left out, the Liberals were still peeved at an earlier Tory broadcast on "deregulated" bus services in Hereford and Worcester. Grateful pensioners filmed on the buses, they said, turned out to be local Tory activists who seldom if ever used them.

The SDP/Liberal Alliance, whose own programme went out on Monday, alone appeared immune from charges of having lied to the electorate, or at least misled it. Cynics argued, however, that the broadcast contained little of substance.

DIRECTORS BACK PENSION MOVE

By Our Business Correspondent

The Institute of Directors last night pledged its support to moves to abolish the State Earnings Related Pensions Scheme in sharp contrast to the stand taken by the Confederation of British Industry.

In the first of a series of pub-spending discussion documents the Institute called for the immediate scrapping of the scheme and said its cost threatened to become "sun-supportable next century."

COAL LOSSES TO EXCEED £2bn

By Our Parliamentary Staff

Coal industry losses this year are expected to exceed £2 billion largely due to the miners' strike, Mr Walker, Energy Secretary, said in the Commons last night.

At the last count 46 working coal faces and 25 salvage faces had been lost, while a further 42 faces, including 37 working faces, were causing serious concern.

Commons Sketch

MASON PROTESTS TOO MUCH

By EDWARD PEARCE

"A PROJECT such as De Lorean would not now be supported."

The words of Dr Boyson would have seemed to most members the barest grudging minimum of residual humility and 20-20 hindsight to be expected when Government had sent valuable exchange into the shredder to the tune of £75,850,000.

Not a bit of it. On a notably crazy day Mr Roy Mason, the Minister principally responsible for the launch of cash into onter space, remembered his Clausewitz or perhaps his Scargill.

Treating attack as the best form of defence, he said that but for the hard-faced Tories, De Lorean would still be in business turning cars off the assembly line.

Mr Mason is to self-doubt and humble regret very much what the Rev. Ian Paisley is to Romanising tendencies. The sum lost was, after all, paltry, a mere £75,850,000.

Compare it, he said in the grand way of a Victorian mill owner boasting about bigger steam-looms, with Concorde. That had cost £795 million. None of your cheap imported muck but real British losses with a nap you could run your hand over.

Almost, but not quite apologising for the modest, undersized, unassuming little loss he had begun to run up, Mr Mason turned to abuse the public accounts committee whose chairman, the civil and admirable Robert Sheldon, had just led us through a chronicle of commercial atrocity recounted with too much British reserve.

The Committee was not well attended he raged, giving figures for attendance.

'Nit-picking'

Mr Sheldon quietly intervened and corrected him with the real numbers: "I can't be bothered with my Rt Hon. Friend nit-picking on the figures" came the reply with the old world politeness of the South Yorkshire coalfield.

Candidly, a more astonishing speech has not been delivered by a past or present Minister in my recollection.

He had rushed about as a Minister taking every precaution about the suitability of the De Lorean project, everyone had backed him, and the Cabinet, which had authorised him to go ahead, had had 18 members present, not the miserable six or seven of the Public Accounts Committee which had revealed the scandal.

Mr Mason has a thing about attendance at meetings. War declared by a quorum has clear precedence over an undermanned armistice agreement.

Of course American business had favoured such a deal

Mr George Parks (Labour) informed Mr Mason that General Motors didn't want De Lorean around their works at any price.

Anyway it was none of his fault. He had made the agreement but why hadn't the Tories amended it? But for them De Lorean could have been saved.

As for everybody else (including Mr De Lorean and I just think Mr Mason) they had done a remarably fine job — "by our deeds we may be remembered."

Rugby forward

The whole point about Roy Mason is that he combines the reserve of a go-go dancer with the approach of a rugby league forward.

He sees himself as a bringer of jobs, Mr De Lorean as the sort of enterprising chap who could teach these fastidious City of London types how capitalism really works, and the whole enterprise as "a better weapon against the IRA than the British Army".

Unfortunately for the opponents of De Lorean, Mr Nicholas Winterton is one of them.

For if Mr Mason sounds like a brass band at his own funeral, Mr Winterton sounds like one of those characters with private placards telling you they have been cheated by the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the grandmaster of the Freemasons.

And it is not in the least incredible that Conservative response to his cries may have been cynical, indifferent and incompentent (what are governments for?).

But when a man starts telling the House that for his meeting with the Prime Minister he attempted to take his solicitor along only to be confronted by the Attorney General who answered questions "like a Dalek," judgment is growing just a touch wild.

Somehow one felt that, right or wrong, Mr Winterton could best protect himself by sitting down.
